

When Floods Hit Manchester, As Told By An Old Resident

Way Back In '69 This Town Was Scene of Desolation When Unleashed Waters Wrought Ruin and Destruction—Fred Snow Tells How He and Lone Chicken Were Treated For Hours By the Raging Torrents.

He said that it wasn't such a big flood. It didn't affect such a large area as the recent flood which covered a lot of New England, but to him it was the biggest flood, for he was directly concerned with it.

Sitting in his room at the Old People's Home in Hartford, the thing is just a memory now. One of those things which just seem to happen, have more or less serious consequences and are passed over as matters of course.

It happened away back in 1869, this flood, and it did a whole lot of damage to Manchester. It was the worst flood that the town had ever experienced.

Fred Snow is now 77 years of age. He was only a boy of 19 at the time any of all the thousands of people living in the vicinity of the Hockanum river, he was the only one who came closest to death.

Mr. Snow has been an inmate of the Home since 1921, but he has come out of it several times to do some work in Manchester. He gets his spending money that way, he says, and as there are no hard and fast rules in the Home, he can come and go as he likes.

Maybe they won't want to hear of that flood," he said. "It happened so long ago, and besides, this flood we have just had along the Connecticut river seems to push our little flood into the background. It wasn't a big one, this Manchester flood, and it didn't last long, but while it lasted it certainly was terrible."

Town Meeting Night. Town meeting day in 1869, the first Monday in October, dawned bleak and raw. Lowering clouds promised rain, and it was not long before the rain did fall. It was the usual autumn storm; it was more of a midsummer thunder-storm, except that it has lasted a good many times longer than any ordinary summer shower.

Towns up the Hockanum and the Tankersoon rivers had felt the force of the storm long before it had hit Manchester. Dams up the river had burst, and mills had been washed away, and mills had closed up, some of them because they had been moved from their foundations, others because the owners saw the danger to their employees.

The pond. The flushboards still stayed on top of the dam and I guess a lot of us were too busy throwing the hook to see that the ditch had filled up and was a roaring river.

Some of those present saw it after a while and most of them ran to safety across the little bridge. But Snow, who with another man was holding the hook, did not get across in time. He helped the other person to get across just before the bridge collapsed, and found that he was marooned on the rampart.

Little by little the earth of the rampart washed away. The flushboards by this time were away under water and the little ditch at the right of the dam was roaring away at a great rate, the water having worn a big hole in the side of the pond.

Still the water kept rising, forcing Snow to the highest part of the rampart. It was raining and it was cold. Afternoon was drawing to a close and darkness was descending. Still the water rose and with every rise, Snow was forced further toward the top of the mound of earth.

Marooned on Rampart. Not a soul on the rampart with him, the nearest human beings on the other side of the ditch, other than the other side of the river on the other side. Nobody could get him off, for the water was too high and rushing to fast.

Snow was left there to speculate. His only hope lay in a tree, and if the water came too high, it might be washed away. But it was temporary safety, anyway, and Snow took advantage of it. He climbed to a crotch about halfway up and perched there.

He sat in the crotch of the tree and thought it all over. If the tree held he might be able to remain there until morning, if he did not fall out of his place of safety. If the water rose too high he might just as well give it up, for he would be tossed into the rushing current.

Efforts at Rescue. Friends on the right bank of the pond tried to float a boat down to him, but the current was too strong across the dam and always the boat was out of reach. The rope became tangled up in driftwood and debris, and the boat idea was given up.

People who had gone from Buckland to the town meeting were stuck. The bridge at North Main Street over the Hockanum had gone down the river with the Yellow Block and the only one left was the trestle known as the Tin Bridge, called that because it was of wood sheathed with tin. Incidentally, although it is now of modern steel construction, it is still called the Tin Bridge.

On the other side of the town the flood was ravaging everything. Bridges all over the town went out and when morning came not one had survived. People were wading down the stream, carrying with the human cargo which had sought refuge in its branches.

People get grey hair for less than this, but Mr. Snow's hair stayed its natural color. He wasn't worried a great deal, for his uncle was on one side of the stream, calling to him now and then to help keep his courage from ebbing.

that I made and he stopped at them automatically. "When I got a new customer I would have to stop there three times before the horse would know that it was a regular stop. If the customer moved away and I passed by the house three days in succession, the horse knew that there was no longer to be a stop there."

Floods and all that seem far away to Mr. Snow now. He sits in his little room at the home, all provided for the rest of his natural life, and he has a little money left over from his admission fee, on which the home pays him interest.

They had him come and go as he wants, and every summer he takes a trip somewhere. So his old age is not as unpleasant as it could be.

The Blazing Horizon

The First Historical Novel Ever Written Originally for Newspaper Publication

A VIVID picture of the Southwest of the "Eighties," when the spoken word was less eloquent than the six-gun; of hell-roaring border towns where men quarreled and killed and went on about their business, or rode south a few miles to a place called No Man's Land; of the vast cattle ranches of the famous Cherokee Strip and the long-drawn-out fight of David Payne and his "Boomers" to open the Indian Territory to settlement.

That is "The Blazing Horizon," newest serial story by Ernest Lynn. It deals with one of the most interesting phases of frontier history--the beginnings of Oklahoma--and culminates in the great rush of 1889 when 50,000 of the nation's land-hungry stormed across the border in a mad race for free homes.

A GAINST a picturesque background of which little has been written, Ernest Lynn has pictured the romance of Tony Harrison and Rita Moore. After months of research and interview, Lynn has traced, with painstaking regard for accuracy, the colorful careers of Pawnee Bill and other famous pioneer figures of the same era. He gives for the first time an authentic recital of Pawnee Bill's early activities.

"The Blazing Horizon" marks a new departure in newspaper fiction. It is the first historical romance ever written originally for newspaper publication. Every chapter is illustrated, either with the striking brush-work of Joe King or with rare, old-time photographs. It will be found only in The Herald, within a radius of 30 miles.

Children's Books Week To Be Observed Here

The South Manchester Public Library has an especially interesting display of books for Children's Book Week which will be nationally observed next week.

Both parents and children are urged to come and see this exhibit. Every variety of books for children will be found; books to amuse them, to entertain them, to instruct them; books for the youngest child to the boy or girl ready for High School. These books are attractively bound editions and many are beautifully illustrated.

The object of children's Book Week is to bring before parents, teachers, and everyone concerned with the welfare of children, the importance of cultivating among boys and girls the reading habit, and also to offer guidance in the selection of books.

Reading should be not only educational but of real pleasure to children. Parents may influence them to read the most interesting and beneficial books by knowing the better books which are put out today themselves. For this reason the display of books at the library should prove of interest.

To show the range of books represented in the exhibit, here are short reviews of a few books in the collection.

For the very young: "The Popover Family", by Ethel Calvert Phillips. This is a prettily illustrated book written in an imaginative vein about Mr. Popover who was a China doll and his children, Veretina and Looloo. The author has been a kindergarten teacher and knows the kind of stories little children like best.

For those a little older: The Magic Pawnshop, by Rachel Field. It is an account of the night that thirteen-year-old Prinda spent in Miss Minerva MacLoon's pawnshop, where everything was bought and sold, including magic.

For older children: The Trade Wind, by Cornelia Meigs. This handsomely printed and illustrated volume contains the new Beacon Hill Bookshelf Prize Story, a tale of adventure on the sea in the days just before the Revolution.

FENCING NOW POPULAR WITH LADIES IN PARIS

Paris.—Fencing has only recently become popular with the fair sex in France. But the presence of thirty-seven pretty, women contestants during "Fencing Week" which was held in Paris not long ago, show that it has taken a definite place in the list of feminine sports which is getting longer everyday.

Many of them showed that they could compete on an almost equal footing with mere man, in spite of their inferiority in strength and build. Madame Dutweiler-Dufour is one of the ablest Frenchwomen handling the foil and has crossed swords with many of the best fencers in Europe.

She says he had a foil for a and still treasures the fragments as a trophy. Her father was her first teacher in swordsmanship. That was in Switzerland in her very early days. Later he sent her to Paris to perfect her art under the direction of the noted professor, Adjutant Heller.

After the war, and the death of her father, she returned to direct his establishment.

of adventure on the sea in the days just before the Revolution. David Dennison, the eighteen-year-old hero supplies plenty of excitement as he sails from Massachusetts Bay to the Indies, to Africa, the Mediterranean and the Baltic, and thence home. The author is the great-granddaughter of Commodore John Rodgers, once commander of the old frigate "Constitution."

The female birth rate in England is decreasing. Last year, per 10,000 population, males increased by 53, females by only 40. "Ladies" of the British Royal Court now include the Mistresses of the Rhodes, Ladies of the Bedchamber, Women of the Bedchamber, and Maids of Honor. Four of the Women of the Bedchamber act as Queen Mary's secretaries.

Directors and actors never will admit it, but title writers are becoming the life guards of Hollywood. Many a poor picture has had its life saved by one of these fellows. A good recent example was seen in "Stop That Man" at Universal. When the picture was completed, it was pretty bad. Garrett Gramham was called in to write a set of sub-titles and he pulled the film out of the grave.

HEBRON

Sunday guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Clark, were Mr. and Mrs. Newton Clark of Hartford, Miss Maude Clark, and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Jones and their son Chester of East Hampton.

Several members of the D. A. R. attended the November meeting of the Colonel Henry Champion Chapter, held at the Nathaniel Footo Chapter House in Colchester on Wednesday.

Recent guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Wyman were Mrs. William Murdock, Don Owens, and Frank Sparks, all of New York.

The Hopevale Seventh Day Advent Church was visited by Elder Prebeger of New London at a recent evening meeting. He was accompanied by Mrs. Freilberger. Others present in an official capacity were Elder Moffat, president of the Atlantic Union, Mr. Scriven, missionary secretary of the conference, and others.

Miss Clara Lord has returned from New York City where she spent several days attending a reunion of part of the members of her class of the Connecticut College for Women, 1925.

Mrs. Frank Porter has been unable since the Connecticut River flood, to get any word from her parents, who live in the flooded area in Newport, Vermont. This region has been cut off from telegraphic communication or mails.

The Rev. John Deeter expects to exchange pupils on Sunday with the Rev. Duane Wain, pastor of the Columbia Congregational church. Mr. Wain will officiate at Hebron and Gilead.

Mrs. Della Porter is the guest for a few days at Crescent Beach, of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Little, at the Little Cottage. Mr. Little has held the position of engineer at the state library at Hartford for quite a term of years. He has now given up this work and has moved from Hartford to occupy his Crescent Beach place.

The doctor had received a hurry call from the home of a young couple who had their first baby. Arriving, the doctor found the young father on the doorstep, watch in hand.

"What's the trouble?" asked the doctor.

"Nothing this time, Doc. My wife just wanted to see how quick by you could get here in case the baby was taken suddenly sick. You made it in four minutes this time."

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE: (133) Development of Gas

Gas lighting was taken up in London by a German named Winsor, who asked Parliament to make it compulsory for every home to have gas. He wanted the company he was forming to have the right to make the gas, and the profits, he said, would be so great that he would be able to give the state great sums. Parliament refused consent, but in 1810 a gas company was formed.

SCOTTISH BISHOP SUNDAY SPEAKER

Right Rev. F. L. Deane and Very Rev. H. Erskine Hill At St. Mary's.

The Right Rev. Frederick L. Deane, D. D., Bishop of Aberdeen and Orkney, and the Very Rev. H. Erskine Hill, two distinguished ecclesiastical figures of the Episcopal Church in Scotland, will preach at St. Mary's church here tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Bishop Seabury was born in Groton in 1729 and was graduated from Yale college in 1748. He studied medicine and theology in Edinburgh, being ordained deacon and priest in 1753 and five months later returned to America. He held several pastorates in New York and New Jersey and came to Connecticut in March, 1783, to become rector of St. James Episcopal church of New London.

Aberdeen gave to America its first Episcopal bishop and the object of this book of New England leading Episcopal churches is to raise a permanent memorial of that unique event which will mean an imperishable link between America and Aberdeen.

The present St. Andrew's cathedral is reputed to be one of the ugliest cathedrals in the British Isles and utterly inadequate as a cathedral. The appeal for funds, in a booklet describing the history of St. Andrew's, says among other things: "In American soil the memorial of Bishop Seabury's consecration is seen in a thousand magnificent churches in her great cities."

Provost Hill who will speak at St. Mary's tomorrow is a descendant of the Scotch of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, a movement which originated in America and which has profoundly affected the American church. He is a most eloquent speaker and it is expected that St. Mary's church will be filled to overflowing at the special service tomorrow afternoon.

This And That In Feminine Lore

All discussion as to where one should buy one's Christmas gifts will end with a visit to the Old Wood Shop, Pitkin street.

Soon you will see them peeping out from the smartest fur-collared coats—those soft, crushable, ever so warm Shetland wool scarfs, in flattering tones of rose, blue, orange, tan, green, black or white and combinations of colors.

Never before, it is asserted that there has been such a vogue for velvet. The autumn debutante wears it to the dancing party, the hostess wears it to pour tea, and the business girl changes to it on every possible occasion.

Another young man, John Langdon Davies, has just steamed in from abroad, England to be exact, to lecture about bankruptcy confronting the hearth here in America with the prospect of England following suit.

Ruth Elder would seem to be almost as lucky as "Lucky Lindy" to arrive in New York on Armistice day, when the people of that city always ready to give a royal welcome to anybody who has accomplished a notable feat.

There are more than 1000 woolen mills in the United States.

FLAPPER FANNY SAYS:

Last summer we were crazy with the heat; now it's the heater.

LETTER GOLF

A PAR TEN FOR YOU From LINDY to FLYER is ten strokes, according to the par solution which is printed on another page. If you can do it in less, that's fine.

Letter golf grid with words LINDY and FLYER.

THE RULES. 1-The idea of letter golf is to change one word to another and do it in par, a given number of strokes. Thus to change COW to HEN, in three strokes, COW, HOW, HEW, HEN.

SENSE and NONSENSE

ARMISTICE DAY—NOV. 11TH. To the honored memory of the patriots of the Great War, who, forsaking every selfish purpose, gave their best to their country.

When you've grown up with a business you've done your share; you don't have to go to seed with it.

And when women buy now, the less they buy the higher it goes!

An easy way to make a friend is tell someone he works too hard.

It isn't your position, but your disposition that makes you happy or unhappy.

In the trials of life most of us are found guilty of being complainers.

Gold-Digger's Version: "No-body loves a fat man."

The longer the engagement the less time you will have to be married, if that is any consolation.

Big dope plot frustrated. Cop arrests cold with a bottle of quinine.

The nice thing about being a man is, you don't have to stay home after you wash your head.

Young Mr. Stayer—Er-er-excuse me, Mr. Goofy, I've courted your daughter for the past ten years and I want to marry her.

Mr. Goofy—You surprise me! I thought you wanted a pension.

Ward—Your wife dresses well, why don't you? Shoup—"That's why!"

The biggest part of a fish is the tale.

Husband: "Your check to the grocery man has just come back from the bank marked 'No funds.'" Wife: "That's queer. I saw an ad in the paper only yesterday that the bank has a surplus of over $3,000,000."

Our idea of a tightwad is the fellow that always buys 1 cent stamps because he gets more paper for his money than if he bought twos.

INHUMAN NATURES

As soon as a man acquires a roll The world declares he has no soul.

As soon as a man acquires re-nown The world begins to run him down.

As soon as a man ties up for life The world exclaims, "His poor, poor wife!"

As soon as man ties politics His friends exclaim, "He's up to tricks!"

When any man achieves success The world remarks, "Twas luck, I guess."

It sure does give a man a shock To see how quick some people knock.

THE TINYMITES

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

"Hello, there, bunch," the clown cried out. Then he began to prance about. "I'm feeling pretty happy, and it's just because I'm free. Nailed in that barrel was a fix. Now that I'm free, I'll do some tricks, and if you want to get some laughs, just keep your eyes on me."

Jack Lockwill Back at Rocklake

by Gilbert Patten

Baffled, Jack walked slowly back toward Hampton House. He had passed from view of the laughing group when he met a cross-eyed junior called "Crossfire."

Joe Piper, nicknamed "Gustard Pie," was one of the Hargon bunch. "Thank you, Crossfire," said Jack, as the friendly junior turned away.

Late that night, seven boys, disguised by black hoods which wholly covered their heads, stole one by one into an old, abandoned iron foundry, far from the Academy.

The first led to enter the foundry admitted the others as they came, singly, and gave a pre-arranged signal knock on the door. After the appearance of the seventh boy, the door was barred.
