National City Official Tells Senate Probers His Com- pany Gave $10,000 to Spread Propaganda.

Washington, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Gordon S. Rentschler, of the National City Bank of New York, testified today before the Senate lobby committee that the bank had contributed $10,000 to be used in helping present the views of Cuban producers to the Congressional committees handling the tariff legislation.

Rentschler, one of several witnesses called before the committee to tell of efforts to raise or lower the sugar tariff, said that was the only way the views of the Cuban producers could be given to the House ways and means and Senate finance committee.

The money was turned over to H. C. Lakin, president of the Cuba Company, and Edwin P. Shattuck of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters Association, he testified.

NEW EGYPTIAN TOMB IS FOUND BY SCIENTISTS

New York, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Discovery of the tomb of Meryet-Amun, Egyptian queen, who was buried in regal splendor more than 30 centuries ago, is announced in a bulletin of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The mummy, encased in two coffins, the outer of which was described as "one of a richness comparable to that of the outer coffin of Tut-Ankh-Amen" was found in excavations adjoining the temple of Deir el Bahri near Thebes by the Metropolitan expedition headed by Herbert E. Winlock.

Queen Meryet-Amun was the daughter of Thut-Mose III and the consort of his successor, Amenhotep II. She is believed to have died between 1480 and 1440 B. C.

Pillaged by Robbers
Robbers pillaged the tomb about 1049 B. C., stripping the coffins of the sheets of gold in which they were sheathed and taking other precious materials used in which they were sheathed and taking other precious materials used in their ornamentation. The tomb was partially restored by officials of the Necropolis.

Describing the coffin in his report Mr. Winlock said:
"The big coffin of Meryet-Amun is a remarkable object. Not only is it of superbly skillful joinery, made of carefully selected cedar planks tensed together and curved inside and out to a uniform thickness."

"The carving of the face has been studied with the most subtle knowledge."

GET TOGETHERS
HIT HIGH MARK

Last Night's Program Sets
Standard Hard to Reach;
Talk on Firearms.

When Get Together members get together it is always an assurance of a good time, but last night when nearly 200 members of the Cheney club met they nearly outdid all standing records for a thoroughly enjoyable evening. All three divisions of the meeting, the dinner, the entertainment, and the after dinner talk, were so good that an extremely high standard was set for other mill departments to shoot at.

The dinner served by the Main office and Old Mill groups and prepared by Chef Urbano Osano was extremely good. It consisted of roast chicken, mashed potato, dressing, cranberry jelly, ice cream, cookies and coffee and was as usual, an Osano dinner that is always top-notch. The roast chicken was served boneless and the portions were so large that the heaviest eater must have been satisfied.

Fine Talk.
The speaker of the evening, Frederick T. Moore, vice-president of the Colt's Patent Firearms Company, of Hartford, was unusually interesting. His subject was one that naturally interests every man. There is a fascination about firearms that makes any discussion of them worth listening to. A complete report of Mr. Moore's talk follows later in this article.

Entertainment.
The entertainment program unique and clever under the direction of Harry White and necessary paraphernalia was provided by John Reinartz. It was designed as a broadcast from Radio Station CEGC and the announcer was "Hiccupps Carling" impersonated by Ray Pillsbury. The program was opened by Harry White and his Cheney Troubadors, an orchestra picked up through the mills and combined with Bill Waddell's Get Together club band. The opening selection by the Troubadors was "The March of the Silk Worms" by Cocoon.

Corwin Grant, introduced as a lyric tenor broadcast "Sleepy Valley" and then Eddie Bateson, of the Engineering department gave a series of pianologues. He was roundly applauded. Fred Bendall sang "Give a Man a Horse" and Ed Taylor and the band rendered "Sweet Mystery of Life." Harry White, comedian extraordinaire, rendered "I Get the Blues When It Rains." Announcer Pillsbury then called out the correct time for listeners and then announced Hilding Bjorkman as "Ukelele Ike." Bjorkman rendered several numbers and then the Troubadors closed the program with "Tip Toe" and "Painting the Clouds." The entire company was heartily applauded.

Sling First Weapon.
Since the beginning of the world, said the speaker, man has had to defend himself. But he did not have the physique to cope with the large animals. What he did have however was the mentality that told him to use rocks as missiles of defense. Then came the earliest form of throwing device, the sling, said to have been invented by the Phoenicians. Next the bow and arrow was used followed by the cross bow in the year 1200, the time of the Crusaders. This type of instrument was so cruel that Plus the Third forbade its use on the Christians, though not on the infidels. King Richard introduced it into England and later was killed with the same device. From this arose the legend that it was the judgment brought upon him for bringing the cross bow to England.

The next development was a tube shooting flaming wax balls, used by the Chinese. The Argubus, match lock, and wheel lock, followed in rapid succession until in 1400 when the flint lock was invented and survived a period of over 300 years. About 1800 a Scotch minister, Alexander Forsyth invented the percussion cap.

Colt's Invention.
In 1814 Samuel Colt was born. While still in his teens he went to sea and on a voyage whittled a model of a revolving pistol, which in reality is the revolver, out of wood. The principle of this gun was a cylinder revolving around a common axis. On his return home his father refused to assist him in marketing his invention so young Colt took to the road, demonstrating laughing gas to raise money for manufacturing the gun.

In 1836 Colt started his first plant at Paterson, New Jersey and in 1847 moved to Whitneyville, Conn., then to Hartford. In 1836 during the Seminole War he provided the government with revolvers. So satisfied was the government that from then on Colts have been standard U. S. Army equipment.

Rigid Tests.
Mr. Moore described the rigid tests each Colt is subjected to before leaving the factory stressing the rust, dust, and endurance test. The revolver is emerged in a solution of sal ammoniac and allowed to rust. Without oiling it must be cocked and fired. In the dust test the instrument is placed in a box and for two minutes a strong blast of pulverized sand blows upon it, until the gun is filled and covered with dust. This is done to simulate the condition which the army meets on the desert. Dust can be wiped off with the hand or blown off and then it must be able to be cocked and fired.

The speaker went on to explain the various types of automatic pistols, products of the genius of John Browning. He explained the theory of the recoil and the air cooled and water cooled machine guns.

Fast Guns.
During the World War, Colts was producing guns for the government firing up to 600 shots a minute. But the government remained unsatisfied and just lately have adopted a gun capable of firing 65,000 rounds at 1400 shots a minute.

All Colts are made from steel forgings or bar stock. Every revolver undergoes 1010 operations or inspections. There are 564 machine operations, 124 hand inspections and 322 eye inspections. The blue surface on many models is produced by placing the gun in a furnace with a heat of 690 degrees and allow it to remain there for five hours. If the gun passes all the inspections it is then sent out of the factory as a finished product.

Mr. Moore's talk was made doubly interesting as he had many samples of old type pistols and rifles; a Browning machine gun; high power cartridges up to .50 caliber; and the latest type pistols and automatics.

Mr. Moore was given a rising vote of thanks for his talk.

CAPITAL MOURNS

President, High Officials and Foreign Diplomats Pay
Final Mark of Respect.

Washington, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Flags at half staff throughout the land today signaled the cessation of governmental affairs as President Hoover and other officials of both the American and foreign governments assembled in the historic east room of the White House and paid final tribute at the funeral of James W. Good, the late secretary of war.

The services of the Presbyterian church were conducted with simple dignity. Around the room, in which many epochal events of American history have taken place, were floral tributes from personal friends, foreign governments, and many organizations.

The metal casket was placed before the east tier of windows which were draped in heavy gold brocade. Guard of Honor
Two soldiers at either end of the casket stood at rigid attention. Elsewhere in the room, the gold braid on the uniforms of high officers of the Army and bright decorations on the uniforms of diplomats and military attaches of foreign powers appeared in sharp contrast to the somber clothes of governmental officials.

Members of Family
Mrs. Good, her two young sons, and other members of the immediate family sat apart in the green room and heard the services from there. The President and Mrs. Hoover, Vice President Curtis and his sister, Mrs. Dolly Curtis Gann, Chief Justice and Mrs. Taft, Speaker Longworth and Cabinet members sat immediately in front of the casket.

The services opened with a prayer by the Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian church, who read the comforting scripture: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

Then followed the reading of the 23rd Psalm; then an invocation, and the Lord's Prayer.
The Rev. Mr. Sizoo stood at the head of the casket. He next read a passage from the First Corinthians; afterwards from the Gospel of St. John:

"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me."
There followed a reading of a poem by Margaret Sangster. The services were brought to a close with a pastoral prayer and a benediction.

EIELSON PLANE

Wilkins and Eielson made their way afoot, and after much hardship and in the face of heavy storms, reached their flying base nearly a fortnight later.

"Only much luck and skill saved us when Eielson dropped the plane down blindly in the storm," Captain Wilkins said later. "If we had but one hour's more fuel supply at the time we would have reached the coast. Instead we walked four days."

Break Through Ice.
At one time, Wilkins broke through the ice and was soaked to the skin.

Each dragging an improvised sled they pushed ahead, discarding the sleds as the provisions dwindled. The experience did not discourage Eielson, for he again joined Wilkins when the latter undertook another and successful flight from Point Barrow to Spitzbergen, Norway.

Eielson, a native of Hatton, N. D., is 32 years old. At the outbreak of the World War he enlisted in the Army Air Service and did his first flying at Rockwell Field, Calif., where he received a first lieutenant's commission. After the war he became a commercial flier, organized several small companies in the west and middlewest and in 1922 went to Fairbanks, Alaska, where he obtained a position teaching English and mathematics. He soon organized a flying company there, carrying a Jenny plane, in which he carried prospectors to and from mining camps. He obtained an air mail contract in Alaska in 1924, but later re-entered the Army. He was stationed at Selfridge Field near Ft. Clemens, when Captain Wilkins again sought his aid on the Polar expedition.

Opinions Divided
Opinions about the Java man, Miller pointed out, disagree, on not less than 15 points, while there is agreement on a single thing: that the skullcap is strangely different from the corresponding part of other known mammals, both recent and fossil.
Summarizing the scientific opinions about the Pittdown man, he found that authors agree on one point again. That the fragments of the brain case and the nearly complete nasal bones pertain to man, while there are not less than 20 points of disagreement.

"Two facts alone must be admitted out of the maze of opinions," he said: "That these fossils have furnished an unparalleled stimulus to investigation, and that the things most needed now are more fossils and many of them."
Miller remains an Evolutionist, despite his stand against the value of the evidence so far accumulated. "The idea that all existing plants and animals are derived through

TRADING PUBLIC SEEKS BARGAINS AND SERVICE IN BEST STORE SETTING

Merchandise Must Be Good and Prices Right But, In Addition, Buyer Wants Beautiful Background.

A Proper Perspective

The trading public today demands more than bargains; it requires more than service. It is commonplace to speak of exceptional values and employ printers ink in proclaiming the latest styles, unless the setting for the wares is fitting and complete. To supply the atmosphere, naturally attendant to the modern department store, there must be an environment suggestive of refinement, orderliness and convenience. The trading public seeks not only a good store, but the best store. Merchandise, like a beautiful picture, like a rare bit of sculpture, must be seen in its prospective. Throughout the great new Wise, Smith & Co. Store, the trade is called to give this setting have been exercised to the full.

This beautiful new Hartford store has come into being because Wise, Smith & Co. realize that Hartford traditions are of the best, that Hartford ideals are of the highest and that Hartford is quick to respond to the foresight and enterprise that interpret its expectations and makes the necessary outlay to provide the realization.

For the Future

Wise, Smith & Co. have taken this big step forward because of faith in Hartford, realizing that in so doing the future will disclose full appreciation. The outlay is an investment in the Hartford of the future, which will return many fold in good will and in the continuance of trading relations of mutual satisfaction so long and appreciatively enjoyed.

The departure, through innovations, unusual equipment and the extensive floor space, makes the store among the foremost in Connecticut, and surpassed by few in the country at large.

Firm's Advantages in Buying

Through connections with one of the great group buying organizations of the country, with numerous affiliations, Wise, Smith & Co. have opportunity for securing merchandise at an advantage, which, of course is reflected in the wide field for selecting the latest and the best. This advantage benefits the retail customer since it is Wise, Smith & Co.'s unvarying policy to share all advantages with its clientele.

It should be known that Wise, Smith & Co. are active members of one of the most important groups of associated, independent stores, joined together for the purpose of securing all the advantages of chain organization, without the disadvantages usually entailed by chain store management, expense and the lack of absentee ownership.

Among a host of new outstanding features which will please old and new customers of the establishment, giving an idea of the high level of service which has been carried throughout, are the following:

First: One floor, the fourth, devoted exclusively to everything for boys and the Junior Miss.

Second: The new Wise, Smith & Co. "Baby Shop" has no duplicate of its kind in Hartford.

Third: The new complete men's shop on the main floor, which will appeal to men because it is actually only a step from Main Street, and because by having its own entrance on the north side of the new building, customers are not obliged to go through other departments to reach it.

Fourth: The new and splendidly appointed Women's and Misses' Coat and Dress Departments on the third floor, complete to the utmost degree in everything required for outerwear for Ladies and Misses.

Fifth: Three Main Street entrances of cast bronze frames and doors, with a wide rooney entrance in the center, the latter giving upon a wide and direct aisle to the central elevators and also serving with a minimum number of steps the aisles to all ground floor departments.

Sixth: The most modern and approved long standing type of store fixtures of beautiful woods throughout, permitting an attractive and unobstructed view of the entire length and breadth of each department. An absence of crowding because of the wide, spacious aisles everywhere, because of the ease with which each department is quickly reached and because of the new style of showcases with cut corners making more room at the intersection of aisles.

Eighth: The distribution of convenient, commodious passenger elevators of the latest attractive type and the provision of spacious rest seats with steel doors leading directly to the ground on all floors and entirely enclosed and protected.

Description in Detail With this general understanding of some of the special and new features it is possible to pass to a more extended and detailed description of the various floors and the many departments.

Distinctive Men's Entrance At the northern extremity of the new building is a separate and distinctive men's entrance. This is men's section, exclusively its very own. No longer need the male member of the family be reluctant about shopping in a department store. Now with this new private thoroughfare the man can select his ties, gloves, shirts, hosiery, suits, overcoats and shoes, without entering any other portion of the new store.

As the larger stores in New York and other great shopping centers of America, cater extensively to men, so will the new Wise, Smith, in a way that will be most pleasing and convenient. The boys and youths will also find their clothing and finishing needs in this new department.

Wise, Smith & Co. had particularly in mind the important feature in the arrangement of the new store. Mahogany and walnut cases contain a most varied assortment of male wear. Millinery, in her holiday shopping, will find this a very desirable feature of the store, and unattached gentlemen will also find the environment all that is the special recommendation of exclusive shops for men.

In addition, many and varied are the other departments of merchandise that are to be found on this floor.

Cosmopolitan

Having completely satisfied himself that the main floor of this establishment is truly cosmopolitan in character, the visitor moves toward the handsome elevators at the rear of the main aisle. These elevators deserve special mention, for they are the last word in modernity and comfort. The entrance to them is tastefully decorated with beautiful Italian marble; the doors are of heavy ornamental bronze. The interiors of the cars are more less attractive, and are finished with a delightful mottled green composition.

On the second floor are to be found yard goods, linen, silks, dress goods, washgoods, domestics, blankets and bedding. Also complete departments for women's underwear, sports wear, house dresses, maids' wear, a very intimate Corset department, nurses' uniforms and accessories, and departments for women's bathrobes, silk negligees, etc. The great variety of goods carried on this second floor further attests to the unusual service this store can and does extend to its patrons, and lends emphasis to the oft heard statement: "they'll have it at Wise & Smith's."

Most Beautiful of All

The third floor of the new building is probably the most beautiful of all. For beauty and splendor, its equal is seldom seen. This is the women's ready-to-wear department and millinery department. In all its appointments, in every detail, it approaches perfection, in appointments and convenience. That gorgeous brown and tan rug that stretches over the whole area is especially designed and woven for Wise, Smith & Co. and admirably answers the purpose. It is modernistic in design, its colors are a delightful intermingling of various shades of soft browns and tans. The furnishings in this department are of pleasant brown walnut, except in the fur shop, which is modernistically finished in grey walnut. The rug in this shop has the same design as the larger one but in its green shades.

Thus amid the most fastidious and pleasing surroundings, Hartford women may make their selections from the large and fashionable display of coats, dresses, millinery and furs, for which Wise, Smith & Co. have prepared. Here, too, on this floor, instead of a basement department, is displayed the always tempting variety of underpriced women's apparel for the thrifty woman.

The numerous fitting rooms are of walnut wood. All are under central control system, with attendant at central desk to check the fittings. A special lounging room, solely for the women customers of top department, provides opportunity for relaxation while awaiting, (if desired) the effecting of minor changes. The general waiting room and rest room for the customers of the store has also been located on this floor.

Furs Always an important feature of the Wise, Smith & Co. store is the fur department. This is included on the third floor. A great variety of furs in fashionable designs and stylish modes has been assembled in a special department on this floor. Beautiful furnishings make the space allotted to furs one of the most attractive features of the store.

The Juvenile Department The fourth floor, devoted entirely to the Babies; Children's and Junior Misses department is another outstanding feature in this progressive store. Probably the largest and most convenient of its kind in England, this department will prove a boon to Hartford mothers. Practically every requirement of infants, small children and girls, up to the age of 15 will be found here. Complete outfits may be purchased without leaving this floor. Coats, shoes, hats, hosiery, underwear, night clothes—they are all here, conveniently arranged, accessible with a minimum of effort.

The Junior Misses Shop will be a delight to those dignified young ladies, who no longer regard themselves as children, but who have as yet to gain of sufficient stature to enable them to wear grown up fashions. An interesting and unusual feature of the front elevation is the bay window effect on the second and third floors. The second floor windows project ten inches beyond the face of the building and are

FACADE OF NEW WISE, SMITH & CO. STORE BUILDING IN HARTFORD

BETWEEN OURSELVES: An Appreciation

Anyone may well take pride in being a native of Hartford, and fortunate to become a resident, no matter where one may have been born.

Hartford is a splendid place in which to establish one's home; an excellent city in which to bring up one's children. A fine civic spirit, the best of church and educational facilities, library accommodations, beautiful parks, and many other attractions and advantages which make for a life of happiness, contentment and culture, are the city's outstanding characteristics. There are many opportunities to stretch oneself in Hartford in a splendid present and a most promising future.

My own faith in Hartford is best demonstrated by adding to my holdings and further investing in the splendid edifice now being erected, both from an architectural standpoint and completeness of interior equipment and facilities for modern service rivals the best of store establishments anywhere in the country.

The new building is dedicated to service—to our co-workers, to our patrons, to the community at large. Wise, Smith & Co., take seriously their responsibility of making Hartford even a greater success—a success as a city to work in, to live in, a city in which to be being. Whatever success we have obtained is because of your confidence, your encouragement, no store could possibly achieve as have ours. For your good will and your generous support, we express our deep gratitude and pledge ourselves to your service. It is our animating purpose to prove our usefulness to the community in every way and to serve you faithfully and intelligently to our utmost power. We extend this, on behalf of all the men, women and our co-workers, who have builded so extensively and so successfully. To this, also, the firm pledges its faith and active support.—WISE SMITH & COMPANY.

The New Wise, Smith's Beautiful Structure

The New Store

Notable and Beautiful Structure The splendid new home of Wise, Smith & Company, Inc., architecturally one of the most notable and beautiful department store buildings in America, will contribute richly to the proud dignity of Hartford's Main Street.

Towering nine floors above the street, this handsome new building, adds greatly to the ever changing improvements to the business center of Hartford.

The gratifying impression of character and worth, which one receives upon viewing the building from the street, is pleasurable increased when one steps into the store. For inside and out, this store is truly magnificent and deserving of appreciation. No expense has been spared that Hartford might have one of the finest and best equipped department stores in these broad United States.

Famous architects, upon studying the ambitious plans for this building, exclaimed with delight and were generous in their praises of the many outstanding features and perfections of detail. Unhesitatingly, they proclaimed it one of the handsomest structures of its kind in America.

"Art Moderne" Type

In general, the type of architecture follows along the lines of the "Art Moderne." A dark green granite course, extending to the third floor, is surmounted by two shades of brick work, the spandrel panels being a dark, mottled brown and the piers of a mottled grey. At the upper ends of the brick piers, architectural terra cotta caps serve to accentuate the vertical line motif. A simple cornice of architectural terra cotta, slightly receding, keeps the top of the building in harmony with the lower part.

An interesting and unusual feature of the front elevation is the bay window effect on the second and third floors. The second floor windows project ten inches beyond the face of the building and are thing is new, beautiful and convenient.

An Innovation Stretching out before the visitor is a long wide aisle, which might be likened to a pleasant boulevard from which, on both sides, run neat, inviting avenues. This innovation is one of the features of the new building, and was adopted for the convenience of hurried and tired shoppers. It saves many footsteps and greatly simplifies the finding of the various departments. The shopper has but to walk along the main thoroughfare until she, or he, comes to the proper avenue and then turn into it. The counters, instead of extending east and west as formerly, now run north and south. The advantage of this arrangement will be quickly appreciated.

In addition to the factor of convenience is that of roominess. So wide are the aisles, so ingeniously have they been planned and laid out, that even on the busiest occasions there is scant possibility for congestion. Happy thought for shoppers!

Wholly Charming

The atmosphere of the new store is wholly charming. Furniture equipment and decorations throughout are new and modern to the last degree. This is agreeably impressed upon the visitor as he strolls about the spacious, beautifully lighted, main floor. Aisle, after aisle of long, shining counters of walnut gleaming, intriguing show cases, in which various articles are attractively displayed. Everything that might contribute to add efficiency in the service for which Wise, Smith & Company are famous, has been included.

Great Connecticut Institution

Thus has the modest little business that had its origin a generation ago in a tiny store on the other side of the street, grown by virtue of its unexcelled service and the confidence it has instilled in the public, into a great Connecticut institution. Its history is one of constant improvement and development. It has kept pace with the times, ever expanding to meet the growing needs of the public it served.

Today, its nine huge floors and the downstairs store cover an area of more than 300,000 square feet, and yet it is clearly indicated that in the not distant future still further expansion will be necessary. Founded in Hartford, locally owned and managed always it will continue to do so. Truly Wise, Smith & Co., Inc., is an institution of which this city and state may well be proud.

The officers of Wise, Smith & Co., Inc., are:

Isadore Wise, President. David E. Bernard, Vice-President. Vincent F. Sano, Vice-President. Louis A. Samuels, Treasurer. Edward A. Hart, Secretary. David Wise, Assistant Treasurer.

Soop after the holiday season work will be resumed on the changes. The plans contemplate the remodeling of the entire front so that the old and the new are to be combined to present a Main Street front of uniform type and substantial and choice design.

Architect, Planner, Contractors

Credit for the work in all its varying phases should go to Deming & Hiron, the architects, to John Holzhauser, the store planner, to the James Stewart Company, the general contractor and to the following sub-contractors: Edward Balf Company. C. G. Bostwick, Capital City Glass Co. Herbert Cordier. Central Connecticut Brick Co. R. H. Cone. C. H. Dresser & Son, Inc. Marshall F. Deverson. Otto Epstein, Inc. Griffing-Scott Electric Co. WISE, SMITH'S STORE TO OPEN TOMORROW

Beautiful New Building to Be Thrown Open to the Public for First Time This Week.

Hartford, in the year 1929, has seen much that may be cited as marking the consistent progress with which the city has gone ahead over a period of many years. In industry, in finance, in insurance, in the broader field of municipal endeavor, and along those lines, which make for a better community, our city has been a leader among the communities of New England, and has been foremost among the leaders of the country as a whole.

Hartford has seen the beginning and the completion of the beautiful new store building of Wise, Smith & Co. Of choice architectural design, exceptional arrangements for convenience of the buying public in the wide area embraced by Hartford and its environs, the handsome structure in keeping with the commanding progress of the times, represents the latest development and advancement of this enterprising and successful merchandising firm, which for more than two decades has been serving the public hereabouts. It represents the forward vision and action which have characterized the firm's whole career. It augurs for the future the constant ability and willingness to offer the best in service, in commodities, and in convenience that modern commerce exacts, and the public expects. It is the forward look in practical expression—the promise predicated upon a successful past and a prosperous present, that the future will be even more devotedly dedicated to mercantile service of the better type.

Tribute to the Founder

It is not possible to refer to the big strides of Wise, Smith & Co. without paying tribute to the man—the loyalty to the best business standards and the high character of the founder, Mr. Isadore Wise, whose half century of work in Hartford, has borne so much good. Mr. Wise, today, is the only member of the original firm who is still engaged in business and he is also the only department store head in Hartford who founded the business he conducts and is still its active and directing head. Many of the observing and discerning men, who have helped to make Hartford the fine city that it is, have expressed wonder and admiration at the extent and variety of Mr. Wise's activities. He has given largely to philanthropic institutions, his counsel around the directing boards of finance and industry, and his whole souled interest in every deserving cause have won for him much commendation, and a place among those Hartford men and women to whom intelligent benefactors and wisdom should be credited the deservedly high standing Hartford maintains in the Sisterhood of cities. Mr. Wise has justly earned the title of good citizen, than which no other term conveys so much.

Aim and Purpose

It is to the energy, as well as to the business ability of the founder and his associates that Wise, Smith & Co. owe the fine place the firm now occupies among the department stores of the country. The new store marks the latest step in its entirety the accumulated experience of department store designers of the last decade, and the determination to provide for Hartford a store of unsurpassed construction and equipment.

Values count in the domestic circle, as well as in the fields wherein the financial struggles are carried on. The housewife finds in the modern department store the opportunity for exercising the best qualities of thrift and judgment which makes for happiness in the daily life of today. Not only does the successful merchant provide the quality and quantity of goods which the trade demands, but he also supplies the settings, the furnishings, and service which makes shopping convenient and hence satisfactory.

To do this, in the highest degree has been the aim of Wise, Smith & Co. in erecting the new, commodious and attractive structure now thrown open to the public. From the first glimpse, the visitor is impressed with the substantial character of the building. The exterior invites inspection. Its lower stories of polished granite and the mounting stories of solid masonry may be said to be symbolic of the sound business principles which more than all else, dominate the firm's career, and which, in every sense, may be confidently expected to continue. These principles are more than a policy; they are the animating spirit which pervades every individual, management and staff, and have been the determining factor in the exceptional success of the concern—a success built on service and with an eye single to the best interests of the discerning clientele, which has made the bigger and better store a necessity.

The change, while not revolutionary, is sufficiently marked to emphasize the passing of an epoch and the beginning of a new era. The store, marshalling the best facilities to be had from architect, builder and expert designer, on its opening day will reveal many innovations that must win approval. The company has looked into the future, has analyzed the ideals and the tastes of the Hartford trading circle and has provided an emporium that may justly lay claim as a model commercial retail institution.

a maximum of service to the public and a minimum of effort by the store staff. Yet it has all been accomplished and the store, from basement to the ninth floor, is superbly stocked and so arranged that access to any department is easy and swift.

To Meet Increasing Demands

The store is still growing and will continue to expand, meeting the increasing needs of the city which has endorsed it, and reciprocating by offering, in return, its best to Hartford and its surrounding towns. The progress and growth of this store, which with ten floors of huge size, all teeming with activity and with such constantly increasing demands by the buying public will before long require additional buildings. Most remarkable of all is the fact that this development has occurred in less than the lifetime of the founder, who is still active as its president.

Tradition

One of the cornerstones in the founding of the business was "Satisfaction to the Purchaser." This has been a tradition and is consistently carried on today as in 1897, the year in which this business was started, and is one of the underlying principles which created the loyal following and contributes to the continued growth of Wise, Smith & Co.

ELEVATOR BATTERY CONVENIENT, SAFE

Wise, Smith Store Provides Latest in Electric Lifting Apparatus.

The Elevator Equipment

Especially convenient, both in location and in modern mechanism, are the new elevators in the new Wise, Smith & Co. store in Hartford. A battery of three is located at the western end of new store and approaches directly from the main aisle. Handsomely wrought doors of bronze lend attractiveness to the elevators. Three massive dynamos in the "pent house" atop the building provide the energy and the latest of elevator machinery, installed with a special consideration to safety, completes the equipment. Another battery of three elevators, located on the south side of the store, make for convenience and service.

The customer's admiration is challenged by two signal features of the interior of the nine floors in the store—space and light. The new Wise, Smith & Co. took advantage of the latest vogue of space and natural lighting, because, in a sense, it is beginning all over again with the tools of 1929 to work with.

Nine Sales Floors

The great retail block represented by the older nine-story store and the new block of equal height to the north have been joined together and, roughly speaking, the intervening wall has been torn away to make the store consist of eleven nine-story sales floors, one room covering each combined floor. This is exclusive of the big downstairs division, and other departments on the main floor, leading off from Pratt Street.

"How pleasant" is the instinctive exclamation of the customer stepping off the elevators for the

GOOD CHARGE ACCOUNT SERVICE HELPS BUYER

Judicious Extension of Credit At Wise, Smith's Keeps Pace With General Growth.

Charge Account Convenience Wise, Smith & Co.'s Credit Department, through its many services, has kept pace with the general progress and growth of the store and by judicious extension of credit, maintains leadership throughout Hartford, and other states as well as Connecticut have profited by this modern manner of trading.

A charge account with Wise, Smith & Co. offers many conveniences: a bill fully itemized, rendered the first of every month, enables customers to keep an accurate record and budget of their purchases. It allows also a convenience at the time of purchase by enabling the firm to authorize for immediate delivery to customers the merchandise selected. This facility is made possible through the recent installation of tubes in conjunction with the recently enlarged telephone authorization equipment.

Out of town customers make use of charge accounts when trading by mail or phone, and often times where a proper size, color or size is not definitely known, they may have the privilege of having two or more of the desired articles sent for approval.

Wise, Smith & Co. are always happy to serve in this manner, and on request the driver will take for those items which are to be returned for credit. Prompt, efficient, and courteous service at all times has been the policy of the credit department.

A charge account, with all of the conveniences may be arranged at the credit department, in the rear of the main floor. There one will always find thoroughly trained, courteous employees, who will consider it a privilege to greet the visitor and make arrangements for the opening of an account.

their older sister. What could be nicer?

The Baby Shop
The Baby Shop is complete in every detail, as is the dainty little Layette Shop. This is a new and altogether charming feature of the new store. Everything for the baby is here. Downy quilts, fuzzy little garments, cunning shoes, and everything dainty and pretty for the new baby's requirements.

Furniture Unsurpassed
It is not necessary to remind Connecticut residents of the excellence of Wise, Smith & Co.'s furniture department. For a generation, this department has enjoyed a reputation foremost among the shops of New England. Quality first has always been the watchword. Heretofore housed on one floor of the store, this department has not always seemed to possess space sufficient to display, as should be shown the really beautiful furniture and housefurnishings, which have distinguished Wise, Smith & Co. among department stores, a distinction enhanced because of direct connection with the most famous of furniture houses, with national and international affiliations. Now three entire floors, not only of the old store, but covering the sweep of the fifth, sixth, and seventh floors, of the new building, from southern to northern limits, have been set aside for furniture and accessories.

Home adornment has become one of the outstanding features of the Twentieth Century. Our people have prospered and what more appropriate expression of prosperity can be found than home adornment. "Better Homes" is no passing fad; it is an abiding determination to be surrounded by the most serene and useful articles which lend beauty to the living room, the bed chamber, the kitchen, the lawn and the porch. Wise, Smith & Co. long ago sensed the public trend, and gauged the popular taste in this respect. The great space makes possible display under the most favorable circumstances for selecting just the right thing.

Helping to Select
The fifth floor is given over to the rug, curtain and draperies departments. A large and attractive assortment of merchandise is carried in each. A feature of the drapery department is the manner in which materials are hung or draped over model windows, satisfying the customer as to the appearance it will have when made up. Women will testify to the desirability of this method of making selections. The rug department is well qualified to meet the demands of the Hartford public, from expensive Oriental rugs, and substantial representation by many of the best of America's carpet and rug makers to kitchen and office requirements in linoleum, imported and domestic, of nationally advertised character are carried in liberal stocks.

Noted as Furniture Purveyors
The sixth and seventh floors are devoted to the presentation of the excellent kind of furniture Wise, Smith & Co. have always handled, and for which they have a more than state wide reputation. The stock always on hand is always in stupendous variety. Everything for the furnishing of smart, modern requirements may be purchased here, and with a sound guarantee of lasting satisfaction. For a third of a century, Wise, Smith & Co. have been noted as furniture purveyors. Whether it be a single room, a modest home, a mansion, business office or club, or the complete equipment of a building, everything required in draperies, floor coverings or furniture, may be here met from stocks selected by most competent and tried experts in their respective line. Their contract department has completely provided for many of the best known of Connecticut clubs, societies, insurance companies, and office buildings, libraries, churches, schools and public buildings.

It is planned in the near future to present on these floors, completely furnished rooms and the services of a capable interior decorator will be available to those who buy furniture from Wise, Smith & Co. Here is planned that one can see just how a particular piece or group will look when transferred to one's home. This is of commanding importance and commends itself to every discriminating seeker for the finest and most attractive of all departments, which come under the all embracing title of home furnishings.

Stock Rooms
On the eighth floor are the conveniently arranged and systematically designed stock rooms. Each is under lock and key, numbered and catalogued. It is no small responsibility to have the goods which changing seasons require, to select the variety and the quantity. As a corollary of this is the importance of proper spaces and arrangement of the wares while awaiting the call to the display room. Wise, Smith & Co. have solved these problems for the present, at least.

On this floor also is the central telephone exchange, connecting all departments and placing staff and management in almost instant communication. The Restaurant is on the ninth floor. No small degree of attractiveness is found here. From the lofty height one can survey the city; the Connecticut River winds at one's feet. To the westward the view encompasses the range of hills which mark the horizon.

Beauty Culture
The hairdressing department is on this floor. Five expert barbers, with twelve women operators, ply their trade. Women's hairdressing and beauty culture has become prime features in modern life. Wise, Smith & Co. have provided most only the facilities for the latest haircutting styles, but detached and secluded rooms afford facilities for the shampoo, the singe, and all the other intricate and detailed operations attending up-to-date feminine hairdressing. The business offices are on this floor also.

Downstairs
As in the past, the downstairs floor is a veritable treasure house of the articles of many classifications. Here may be found china-ware, housefurnishings, toys, trunks, radios, lamps, groceries, luggage, wallpaper and automobile accessories.

The downstairs floor of the new building has been joined to the original building of Wise, Smith & Co. and the entire space will be devoted to a model housewares department. Many of the plans for this department have not, as yet been completed, but sufficient has been accomplished to indicate that not only will everything necessary for house and home keeping, but also the many electrical labor saving devices will be found here displayed, demonstrated and explained.

All the necessary and helpful household articles of aluminum, woodenware, the brightly colored modern house wares, fireplace goods, oil cooking and heating stoves, waterless cookers, in fact everything required for the modern housekeeper will be found here invitingly displayed and explained by thoroughly competent sales people.

Here is Toyland
During the holiday season, the entire downstairs floor of the new building will be devoted to the display and sale of Toys. Here will be found a merry Santa Claus, happy to meet all his little friends. There will also be many other special attractions, including the always popular Wise, Smith & Co. toyland, greater and more attractive than ever before.

Several outstanding features of the store should be mentioned with emphasis before going into full detail regarding this big, new utilitarian department store, with its beautiful general plan. In themselves, these features chosen at large are, perhaps, not so important proportionately in regard to shopping as a whole, but they offer some token of what the New Wise, Smith has to give the community in its ten retail floors.

Shopping Under Ideal Conditions
Over and above any particular features chosen at large remains the general plan of the store itself, the sense of space and natural lighting suggested everywhere, the sense of pleasure in shopping under ideal conditions, and the attractiveness and effectiveness of a mercantile house, which is the offspring of experience, success, keen judgment and vision.

REPAIRING CABLES

New York, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Six cable repair ships were groping the bed of the North Atlantic off the coast of Nova Scotia today for cables broken on Monday by the earthquake along the seaboard. Ten or more of the connections between America and Europe were severed by the upheaval among the hills and valleys of the ocean's floor.

The repair ships are kept in constant readiness for emergency of this nature and they were on their way to the apparent source of trouble soon after the breaks were detected.

ADVERTISE IN THE HERALD—IT PAYS

TODAY IS THE ANNIVERSARY

VASCO DA GAMA

On Nov. 20, 1497, Vasco da Gama sailed around the Cape of Good Hope.

The Portuguese navigator was the first European to reach India by the maritime route round Africa.

He was descended from a noble family and was born at Sines, a small seaport of Portugal. After some years at court, he was chosen to command the expedition dispatched by King Emmanuel to India by the all-sea route.

Vasco da Gama sailed from Lisbon in July, 1497, and on Nov. 20 doubled the Cape of Good Hope. In December, he reached the Rio de Infante, where he had to suppress a mutiny of his sailors who shrank from facing unknown dangers that awaited them.

They Anchored off Malindi April 15 and took on board an Indian pilot. After a voyage of 23 days across the Indian ocean they reached the coast of Malabar May 17, 1498.

The ruler of Calicut was hostile and Da Gama was forced to fight his way out of the harbor on the return trip. He returned to Lisbon Sept. 8, 1498.

ROCKVILLE

Water Supply Short

On account of the long continued drought, the Rockville Water and Aqueduct Company, finds it imperative to issue a warning at this time to all consumers of water. They are urgently requested to be as saving of the water as possible, avoiding wherever possible all waste, that the supply may be conserved. The main power gate was closed last night for a brief period. This is one of the measures adopted by the company to aid in the conservation of the water. This is the first time in nineteen years that such a step has been taken.

Commencing today, Rockville mills will run under own electric power. The reservoir at the present time is 13 feet, 9 inches, one of the lowest marks on record.

All consumers are asked by the company to cooperate in saving the water and it is hoped that this timely warning will be heeded.

Springfield Man In Court James J. Hoer of Orange street, Springfield, Mass., was before Judge John E. Fisk in police court on Tuesday morning, charged with stealing $8 from the church and $5 from the offertory box at St. Bernard's church. He was fined $25 on each of these counts and given sixty days in jail. On the third count of doing damage to property he received the same penalties, making a total of $75 and ninety days in jail. He was also taxed the costs of the court, which was $25.96.

The money was taken by Hoer from St. Bernard's church on October 13th and on October 16th he committed the theft at St. Joseph's. A young girl, whose name is being withheld, saw him coming out of St. Joseph's church and noticed that his hand was wrapped with a handkerchief soaked with blood. He entered a car with a Massachusetts marker and drove off. The young lady was alert enough to take the numbers of the markers of the car, and these were later turned over to the local police.

Sunday night Officers Richard Shea and Stanley Kulo went to Springfield, and with Detective Lieutenant George W. Bicknell, went to Hoer's home and arrested him. He admitted the thefts and pleaded guilty to all three counts. Principals of Play Named The tickets for "The Cat and the King" which is to be presented by the Men's club, under the direction of Miss Lelia Church, are now on sale. Mr. Donahue further stated that he has never had to take a new Ford back for payments, which speaks pretty well for both the new Ford and the local Ford owners.

star but to a herd of bulls, for the wildest ride in history.

"From top to bottom, now, there is needed—not a destruction of faith in the future but a drastic deflation of our thought about the present. We must return to our work with a clearer and more modest appraisal of our accomplishments, a more realistic grasp of the difficult problem that we still have to solve and a keener sense of the balance that governs all progress."

It has been unqualifiedly true that this country has been prosperous during the period cited, more prosperous than ever before since the War of the Rebellion. It has been true that industrial and agricultural methods have improved so that the actual needs of the country are more easily and liberally supplied than before. It has been true that labor has enjoyed a larger share of its production than in any previous period. But it has never been true or anywhere near true that anything but work and thrift would or could sustain the nation's prosperity. It has never been true or anywhere near true that the average American family could successfully and permanently maintain a scale of living three or four times higher than that of a quarter of a century ago. It has never been true or anywhere near true that magic was at work to provide luxury and ease for the whole population. It has never been true or anywhere near true that by forming of mergers, signing of papers, stock dividends and melon cuttings one single dollar of concrete wealth was brought into existence. It has never been true or anywhere near true that a nation can sustain itself by selling itself securities. It has never been true or anywhere near true that Ford and Edison and the industrial chemists have been fairy godfathers, conjuring coaches out of pumpkins and diamonds out of beach pebbles.

America has been prosperous and is prosperous today—she hasn't lost a solitary nickel in actual possessions by the stock market debacle; she hasn't even lost a dollar in money, for every money dollar dropped by one gambler was picked up by some other gambler and every dollar of inflated value that has disappeared was a dream dollar that never existed.

But she isn't and never was—and within many centuries probably never will be—so prosperous and so providentially cared for by some superior power that her people will not have to work in order to live and will not have to spend their earnings wisely and prudently and with due regard to their future.

When men and women and boys and girls come to realize that, after all, the difference between today and yesterday is only one of degree, and that the same old inexorable economic laws of ox-cart days hold good in the days of the automobile and the airplane, and that for nine-tenths of us the problem is much the same and bound to be much the same as it was for our fathers and grandfathers, only a bit easier, we shall all be better off, healthier and happier.

By deflation of thought The Business Week means for us to get rid of that millionaire complex. After all, as the Black Crow says—who wants to be a millionaire?

WRONG VERBS

There are times when the use of language, with respect to the choice between even slight shades of meaning, carries a rather heavy responsibility. It is one that rests with special weight on newspapers. At the present moment there are some indications that it is not being fully realized.

References to the Hoover business conferences as likely to go far toward "removing" apprehension and hesitancy in the industrial and commercial fields: seem to us to be as unfortunate and as incorrect as they are frequent. The use of a wrong verb, in this instance, is an error of more than a little importance. It might be nearer to the truth to refer to these conferences as being calculated to "prevent" apprehension and hesitancy (though we firmly believe that even that word would indicate a purpose different from Mr. Hoover's) but there certainly is no industrial or commercial apprehension or hesitancy to remove—as yet. If such conditions arise it will be because the public and the industrial and business world are being overdozed with indirect suggestion of something wrong.

Mr. Hoover's conferences are not, as a matter of fact, being pictured to the country in their proper light. They are not, as slovenly reporting is likely to make the people believe, an emergency measure calculated to meet a critical situation. No critical situation exists and these conferences are not the creation of a moment of unexpected urgency; they were in the President's mind long ago and are

DEFLATED THOUGHT

We could wish that the below excerpt from an editorial appearing in The Business Week might be read and pondered by every citizen of this country; that it might be employed in every school's "current events" period this week and that it might be quoted to every class in economics. These are the sentences:

"Through press, platform and pulpit since 1922 the public mind has been saturated through and through with a myth and legend of miraculous, limitless prosperity and growth. The principles of steady and sure growth were thrown overboard and business hitched its wagon not merely to a being held, not as a means of preventing misfortune but of increasing the genuine economic prosperity of the nation.

The sooner this is fully understood by the country at large, the better. Apparently it is not too well understood in some newspaper and news service offices where eyes have kept so close to the stock market that they cannot see the general business and industrial situation.

WELL CONSIDERED

Prohibition was no new idea to Finland when it was adopted by the young republic as part of a program of progressive laws shortly after the creation of the new sovereign state in 1919. As early as the beginning of the century, when Finland was still a practically autonomous grand duchy of Russia, there had been a period of agitation for the prohibition of the trade in alcohol and only the interference of the Russian Duma prevented the passage of such a law on two occasions. So that when Finland did go legally dry it was a more considered action than the similar one taken in the United States.

For that reason, and because prohibition has had a test of a decade, it is not to be claimed that the people there do not know what they are doing just as well as they do in this country when, through their Supreme Court, they denounce the system as a complete failure.

There is little doubt that the demand of the court for the annulment of the law and the substitution of workable restrictive regulations by the Finnish Diet will be speedily complied with.

IN NEW YORK

New York, Nov. 20.—The other day, when Gotham decided to land-slide its dapper may back into office, the most interesting phase of the one-sided argument was the growth of the Socialist vote.

A certain Norman Thomas, who has run for everything possible except, perhaps, dog catcher, polled the largest Socialist vote in Manhattan's history.

Which again proves how far the lads from the small towns can travel in "the big city" if they have the proper ingredients. Thomas is not a soap box product of the East Side curbstone forums—though he has orated there—but a son of Marion, Ohio. Furthermore he is a minister's son. His father was the Rev. Welling Thomas, who tried to bring up a family of six on the less-than-modest salary of minister with a small parish.

Norman was not reared in what one would call affluence. As a matter of fact, he gathered his first few dimes by delivering newspapers. The late President Harding was on his route. He worked through his youth and he worked through Princeton, where the late Woodrow Wilson was his particular favorite professor. He started out for the ministry, and was threatened for a time with becoming one of the very popular and fashionable preachers, for he was assistant to Dr. Henry Van Dyke, the venerable and kindly writer-preacher of Princeton.

Despite his arguments and questionings of certain Biblical stories, he found himself in charge of a wealthy and exclusive congregation.

In the course of his churchly duties, Thomas found himself one day in the slums of New York—face to face with the poverty, the bitterness and the suffering of a large slice of humanity. It hit him a hard blow which completely jostled his complacency. He found himself absorbed in a study of the other side of life. And the more he saw the more he craved to do something about it. So it wasn't long before he had moved into a settlement house over by the East Side waterfront, working among the poverty-stricken and questioning the economic justice of things.

I'm not sure whether or not it is generally known, but the Socialistic candidate for president, governor, senator, mayor and what not married into a wealthy, socially prominent and eminently established family.

And therein lies one of those charming love stories that the moving spin and novelists write. This was a day when "Hell's Kitchen" deserved its name, and got it. It literally was Hell's Kitchen. They came no rougher and no poorer than they did there. There had appeared in that section a Miss Violet Stewart, whose income was more than comfortable and who could have lived in Gramercy Park when that was quite the most ultra of districts. But she had wearied of social ease and had appeared in the slums. When Thomas met her she had earned the title of "The Angel of Hell's Kitchen." They married and settled down in a blowy tenement so that they could observe the life about them at first hand. Thomas took a church way up in Harlem, living first in one tenement zone and then in another.

Such experiences veered him toward Socialism, and his arguments with his fellow churchmen on the World War finished him. He might have found himself in jail during the war period had not President Wilson, his old prexy, intervened.

So it has gone. From a mere revolt against things, Thomas found himself drifting into the Socialist party—though he wasn't keen on politics or parties. To

AVOIDING INFLUENZA

Influenza has been called the last of the great ancient plagues. It is a rapid traveler, and once a serious epidemic is well under way, it may circle the globe and sweep across the continents, often affecting as high as 40 per cent. of the people. While the other scourges have practically been checked, influenza is still to be reckoned with, although no serious epidemic has occurred since 1918. It does, however, continue to appear in isolated locations principally at about this time of the year.

The first indication of this disease is usually a chilling, shivering sensation, accompanied by headache and pains throughout the muscles of the body, followed by an acute sore throat. The bladder frequently becomes irritated and inflamed.

The three principal forms of influenza are the respiratory, where the lungs and bronchial tubes are affected; the nervous, where the central nervous system is especially affected; and the digestive.

The beginning may be very sudden. The first two days can be called the incubation period, in which there is some fever, alternating with chills, a profound ache in the back and great weakness. The ache in the back and legs seems to extend to the muscles and bones. The eyes are sensitive, the appetite is lost, there may be nosebleed, or the middle ear may become infected. The cough is slight in the beginning, but after the fever goes down it usually becomes worse and the nervous exhaustion more complete. In some cases there is vomiting and diarrhea. The eyes may become infected. However, these symptoms do not usually last long.

The most serious complication is bronchio-pneumonia which causes the greatest number of deaths.

One attack of influenza does not seem to protect you against another as is the case with some diseases. Influenza is always preceded by an autointoxication and by enervation. Late hours, overwork, or destructive habits of thought seem to be the principal causes of enervation. The autointoxication may be produced by overeating, wrong food combinations and constipation.

The easiest way to prevent influenza seems to be to obtain enough sleep, see that your diet is well balanced, and take enough exercise to build up the resisting powers of the body to their highest pitch.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Drink Habit

Question: H. J. asks:—"Can you tell me of a treatment to cure the drink habit? The habit is of long standing, and must be given up. There are many attempted cures of the drink habit which may be given without the patient's knowledge, but none which I know of that are permanently effective without injury to the patient. The drink habit may be easily controlled by anyone who desires to do so, but it is useless to attempt such a cure against the patient's own desire and without the use of his will power."

Sassafras

Question: Mrs. M. O. writes:—"I would like to know if sassafras is harmful, what it is used for, how much of it can one use, etc.?"

Answer:—Sassafras is an aromatic root bark slightly stimulative and is sometimes used to produce a large quantity of urine and to relieve flatulence. The pith makes a form of mucilage which is sometimes used as an application in eye diseases. About one teaspoonful of the extract is used as a dose, but only a very minute amount of the volatile oil can be used. I do not prescribe it to patients, as I believe better results can be obtained from dieting. If you will send me the name of your disorder I will be pleased to give you instructions as to treatment.

Stomach Cancer

Question: K. H. asks:—"Would your system of fasting and dieting have any effect in the way of a cure of an advanced stomach cancer?"

Answer:—There is very little hope of curing an advanced case of cancer of the stomach. However, the best regime is to follow a liquid diet, such as a milk diet, as this seems to give more relief to the patient than anything else.

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Writer

Washington—Thanks largely to the transcendent importance of the London naval arms conference, several involved in the exposures developed by the committee of three senators named to investigate William B. Shearer's activities are going to get very lightly.

If there is no change in the present plans of the committee, many people are going to make use of the word "whitewash."

The committee is composed of Senator Shortridge of California, chairman; Senator Robinson of Arkansas and Senator Allen of Kansas. It adjourned five or six weeks ago after a few days of hearings so that its revelations should not be pouring forth during the Christmas holidays. At the time it was commonly supposed that some of the most sensational testimony was yet to come.

Thinks He's Through

But now Chairman Shortridge indicates that he considers the committee's work virtually completed. When the hearing actually is resumed, he says, there will be only "one or two" witnesses. One will be Dr. Maloney of New York who claims to have written the "secret British document" which so excited Shearer and others. And the committee may or may not, says Shortridge, also recall President Clinton L. Bark of the New York Shipbuilding Company.

Thus the committee apparently is going through with its supposed original thought of "covering up" for the navy. Both Shortridge and Robinson are regarded as "big navy" men and Allen is especially close to the administration. Robinson was the only member who displayed any early aggressiveness at the party hearings and lately Robinson himself was named as one of the two senatorial delegates to the London conference. It is a natural supposition that the apparent agreement of the trio to dig up more dirt has the enthusiastic support of the administration, which has high hopes for the anticipated five-power naval agreement.

Charge Goes Unanswered

Drew Pearson, a newspaper day, with Eugene Debs dead, he is the obvious leader of that party in America. Here is that party organized around the world, though he lives quietly in Greenwich Village. When Premier MacDonald was visiting America recently, his sole companion was this lad from Marion.

correspondent who covered the fruitless Geneva conference, told the committee of Shearer's work there and charged that high naval officers attached to the American delegation had specifically expressed the hope that the Geneva conference would fail. He said that Admirals J. M. Reeves and Frank H. Schofield and Commanders H. H. Frost and H. C. Train in particular had given him the impression that they did not want the meeting to succeed.

Admiral Reeves appeared before the committee and read a prepared statement. He denied that he had ever expressed the hope that the conference would fail. He was asked a few pertinent questions and allowed to depart. Schofield, Frost and Train were never called. Pearson is highly regarded as a Washington correspondent and it was supposed that all the officers mentioned would be questioned in connection with his astonishing story. His was probably the most sensational statement made by any witness and the question of its truth or falsity was of considerable importance to the public interest.

It was also supposed that the committee would try to find out just who in the Navy Department provided Shearer with the confidential official information which he used in Geneva to impress correspondence with his importance. And how the navy people came to recommend Shearer once when he was after a job.

Nobody Cares

Although it is unusual for a Senate investigating committee to wind up leaving so many loose ends hanging in the air—there are other beside those mentioned—probably there will be no great protest from the Senate floor. The navy must send its experts along to London and it might not do to have any of them tarred just a few weeks before they leave.

It was far more important that there be no Shearers and no other representatives of shipbuilders or super-patriotic societies on hand to help wreck this next conference. That much certainly must have been achieved. And there is every reason to believe that the naval experts, whatever they may have done at Geneva, will be on their best behavior in London.

TELLS ROMANCE OF DESIGNING

H. B. Cheney Proves It No Cut-and-Dried Subject, in Watkins Series.

"I like to talk about the personality of designs—their relation to history—rather than the cut-and-dried bones that are usually written about designs," said Mr. Horace Cheney in his lecture, "The History of Design" which he presented at Watkins Brothers last evening.

Mr. Cheney went on to describe design from the very earliest specimens which have been unearthed up to the present trend in modern decoration. Practically every design has been influenced by war, religion or a woman's whim, he said, and went on to tell how the earliest of civilized designs were created.

Practically every country, Mr. Cheney went on to show, had its designs influenced by the Chinese; first the Persians, then the Venetian, Greek and Roman conquerors who endeavored to annex the whole civilized world in order to have possession of the Chinese trades, and finally the Mohammedans in Spain. Even Columbus, Mr. Cheney reminded his audience, was in search for a short trade route to the Orient when he discovered America.

Then Mr. Cheney briefly sketched the different periods of designs in France, the Louis XIV, XV and XVI and the effect that these king's mistresses had on design, how designs were again changed during the Directoire and Empire periods. Fine textile designs were first carried to England by Queen Isabella, who had lived in Flanders, when she hired Flemish weavers to come to England to introduce the art in her new country.

Adam, Sheraton and Heppewhite, were the three greatest English designers, Mr. Cheney said, and he showed how the designs of these great men were influenced by what had gone before, and the arts of the European continent.

"What kind of decorations should one use in a Dutch Colonial home?" Mr. Cheney said he was once asked. The particular family who presented the question were descendants of early Dutch settlers who were endeavoring to restore their old Dutch homestead to as nearly its original state as possible. "Anything that you can steal" was the answer to the question, Mr. Cheney said, after he had carefully checked up on the family's history, for it was found that the first of the family to settle in this country had purchased his home furnishings from pirates who made their headquarters in Spain.

These buccaneers plundered anywhere on the high seas, sacking any thing from a Chinese junk to a richly laden Spanish galleon. The result was that this particular early Dutch Colonial home was furnished with the fine things from all over the civilized world.

"What do you think of modern designs?" Mr. Cheney was asked after his lecture. "I believe that some of today's designs will last, will be handed down as designs that typify this period in which we live, for we must remember that in every one of the 'periods' that have preceded us, the designs at the times were conceded to be the very newest, modern and up-to-date things that could be had. In other words, all designs have at some time been 'modern.' Just as perhaps one or two great artists came out in each period of the past, so there will probably be one or two great artists of today whose work will typify the finest designs of this period. We must remember that there were just as many poor designs in comparison in early periods as there are today. Only the finest and best have been preserved. The others have been discarded, destroyed and lost to the world."

"Personally, I do not believe today's designs which are based on purely geometric forms will survive and represent this period," Mr. Cheney said. "Something more beautiful and graceful will unquestionably be preserved."

Mr. Cheney illustrated his talk with actual samples of Cheney silk drapery and upholstery fabrics, as well as a sample paper design and the Jacquard cards used in weaving on a Jacquard loom.

Mr. Cheney's lecture was the second in Watkins Brothers 1929-1930 series of lectures and recitals, the third of which will be held in two weeks when Mr. Archibald Sessions will present one of his pupils, Miss Etta Otto, contralto, in a song recital.

GRANGE ASKED TO AID FEDERAL FARM BOARD

Seattle, Nov. 20.—(AP)—A plea for support for the Federal Farm Board was addressed to members of the National Grange today by Charles S. Wilson, of the board, who said they could be of great assistance by doing all possible to encourage the cooperative marketing movement.

Samuel R. McKelvie, the board's wheat spokesman, described the organization of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, and what it is hoped this central marketing agency will accomplish for the grain producers of the country.

"We believe that the farm organizations, and particularly the Grange with its long history of service to agriculture, can be of great assistance," Wilson said, suggesting that the local, county and state Granges give support and guidance to the cooperative associations within their territory. He also suggested that the local Granges devote much time to a study of the farmer's marketing problems.

Board's Policies In addition, Wilson discussed in a general way the policies of the Farm Board and told of what had already been done to assist the grain, wool, mohair, livestock and other groups of cooperative associations to organize the national commodity marketing agencies.

"The time is past when cooperative marketing can be based on propaganda," he said, "it is time now for frank and informed discussion of the farmer's marketing problems and of necessity of the farmers becoming able to understand and meet these problems upon their own initiative."

NEW HAMPSHIRE BOY WINS WRITING PRIZE

Des Moines, Iowa, Nov. 20.—(AP)—A New Hampshire boy and a Maine boy were among the eastern district prize winners of the national editorial writing contest conducted by Quill and Scroll, for high school journalists. It was revealed here today with the publication of all the awards.

Bernard Stierman of Laconia, N. H., took third prize while Miss Elizabeth Helen Davidson of South Portland, Me., was fourth.

Students in 350 high schools in the United States and Hawaii participated in the competition which was divided into two branches, newswriting and editorial composition.

Mary S. Riesland of Vancouver, Wash., won the national editorial contest and Ruth Kendall of Wyandotte high school, Kansas City, the newswriting prize. There were no New England winners in either branch of the national contest and only in the editorial writing division of the eastern district competition.

All awards were announced by George H. Gallup, head of the Drake University School of Journalism, who is also secretary of Quill and Scroll.

TRADE SCHOOL NOTES

The first assembly of all students was held yesterday. Many vital questions such as behavior, discipline, studies, recreation and future policies were explained. It is proposed to have these meetings regularly in the future and to invite well known men in trades and industry to address the entire student body.

The carpentry department is extremely busy these days with a variety of jobs such as the making of tables, garage doors, and many kinds of outdoor work. These jobs afford boys an excellent opportunity to learn the various phases of the trade. Simon Luhrs, a recent graduate of this department, who is now employed as a builder was a recent visitor at the school.

The machine department is estimating on a job for the Danbury Trade School.

Installation of the new warping frame in the textile department will be completed this week. This additional new equipment is expected to add materially to the instruction efficiency of this department. The textile department is now complete in every detail, and it is possible to teach every phase of silk manufacturing from the raw materials to the finished goods.

A checkup was made during a recreation period of boys unable to swim, disclosing that only seven boys out of the entire student body needed instruction. Steps have been taken to teach swimming to these boys.

School will be closed for Thanksgiving, beginning Thursday, Nov. 28th to Saturday Nov. 30th inclusive.

SPIESS UNCOVERS AN INDIAN MORTAR

Washington, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Doris M. Cochran, Smithsonian Institution reptile expert, who has for pets a pair of imported live clawed frogs, doubts the discovery of a genuine clawed species in this country as reported from Marshfield, Ore.

Though unable to give a verdict without actually seeing the specimen, Miss Cochran said that, so far as is known, no frogs with bona fide claws exist in the United States. The specimen found fifty feet underground near Marshfield, is quite likely to be a spade foot toad (scaphiopus hammondi), she explained. Seven Oregon specimens of this species are now preserved at Smithsonian.

"Because of his peculiar habits, the spade foot toad appears to be a rarity," she said. "He is both nocturnal and subterranean. With his sharp spade foot he can burrow an almost unbelievable distance. But at breeding season, a few days in the spring, they emerge by hundreds and make a remarkable racket."

Claws as sharp as a cat's, and as horny, protrude from the webbed hind feet of Miss Cochran's pets, brought from South Africa several years ago by the Smithsonian-Chrysler expedition. They are thought to be the only live clawed frogs in captivity in the United States.

There are mortars and mortars, but this one is of very special interest because its history is known and can be traced back to 1699. In that year Samuel Talcott of Glastonbury built a house for his son and the mortar became part of its equipment. How long before that some Indian had fashioned it nobody knows. But it remained in the Talcott family for generations.

Merely as an Indian antique the mortar would be interesting, but as a Talcott family heirloom it becomes of peculiar concern to Manchester, because Samuel Talcott was the son of Major John Talcott and it was Major Talcott, who immigrated from England in 1632 and came to Connecticut in 1636 with Rev. Thomas Hooker, who bought from the Indians the Five Mile Tract which is now the town of Manchester.

This memento of both the Indians and the earliest settlers of this region was gouged out of the trunk of a sycamore tree. It stands about eighteen inches high and is about of the same measurement in diameter. Mr. Spiess intends to present it to the Children's Museum as soon as the show cases are ready.

REPTILE EXPERT DOUBTS STORY OF CLAWED FROGS

Washington, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Doris M. Cochran, Smithsonian Institution reptile expert, who has for pets a pair of imported live clawed frogs, doubts the discovery of a genuine clawed species in this country as reported from Marshfield, Ore.

Though unable to give a verdict without actually seeing the specimen, Miss Cochran said that, so far as is known, no frogs with bona fide claws exist in the United States. The specimen found fifty feet underground near Marshfield, is quite likely to be a spade foot toad (scaphiopus hammondi), she explained. Seven Oregon specimens of this species are now preserved at Smithsonian.

"Because of his peculiar habits, the spade foot toad appears to be a rarity," she said. "He is both nocturnal and subterranean. With his sharp spade foot he can burrow an almost unbelievable distance. But at breeding season, a few days in the spring, they emerge by hundreds and make a remarkable racket."

Claws as sharp as a cat's, and as horny, protrude from the webbed hind feet of Miss Cochran's pets, brought from South Africa several years ago by the Smithsonian-Chrysler expedition. They are thought to be the only live clawed frogs in captivity in the United States.

There are mortars and mortars, but this one is of very special interest because its history is known and can be traced back to 1699. In that year Samuel Talcott of Glastonbury built a house for his son and the mortar became part of its equipment. How long before that some Indian had fashioned it nobody knows. But it remained in the Talcott family for generations.

Merely as an Indian antique the mortar would be interesting, but as a Talcott family heirloom it becomes of peculiar concern to Manchester, because Samuel Talcott was the son of Major John Talcott and it was Major Talcott, who immigrated from England in 1632 and came to Connecticut in 1636 with Rev. Thomas Hooker, who bought from the Indians the Five Mile Tract which is now the town of Manchester.

This memento of both the Indians and the earliest settlers of this region was gouged out of the trunk of a sycamore tree. It stands about eighteen inches high and is about of the same measurement in diameter. Mr. Spiess intends to present it to the Children's Museum as soon as the show cases are ready.

PLANNING TO SUE N. Y. CORPORATION

Hartford, Nov. 20.—(AP)—The American Fiduciary Corporation of Bridgeport, which went into receivership yesterday, will file a claim of $1,950,000 against the defunct Bankers Capital Corporation of New York as the result of a nebulous transaction by which the latter acquired title to 90 per cent of the $2,300,000 outstanding stock of the former, Theodore E. Steiber, counsel for the Bridgeport company said today.

Mr. Steiber said he could not explain or discuss this transaction which has become a central point of inquiry by State and Federal authorities in Connecticut, New York and New Jersey. Arthur P. Connor, president of the American Fiduciary Corporation, has stated that this $1,950,000 had been loaned on call to the Bankers Capital on assurance that bank and trust company securities would be available as collateral. It now develops that the Bankers Capital has only about $100,000 in liquid assets and the American Fiduciary only $25,000.

Unable to Answer. Asked how the Bankers Capital could acquire the title to this stock, Mr. Steiber said he could not answer the question. Mr. Steiber said there are about 200 Connecticut stockholders at present in the American Fiduciary. With the exception of Mr. Connor and his associates, all of them are small investors. Their losses will be determined by the financial condition of the Bankers Capital, Mr. Steiber added. According to Emanuel G. Kield, assistant United States attorney of New York, the Bankers Capital has several million dollars in liabilities and only $100,000 in assets. It was learned today also that some Connecticut individuals had placed substantial sums on call with the Bankers Capital.

SUGGEST R. W. BOYDEN AS WAR CLAIM UMPIRE

Washington, Nov. 20.—(AP)—The name of Roland W. Boyden of Boston, former unofficial representative of the United States with the reparations commission, has been put forward for appointment as war claims arbitrator and umpire of the mixed claims commission, United States and Germany.

It is understood the German Embassy here has been asked whether Boyden would be acceptable to that government as umpire. Both posts were left vacant through the death recently of Judge Edwin B. Parker. President Hoover will appoint the arbitrator, with the advice and recommendation by the State Department. Germany twice in the past has agreed that the President's selection as arbitrator act also as umpire. Though there has been some discussion of appointment of two officials to succeed Judge Parker, it was said authoritatively today that Boyden has been selected by the State Department to serve in both capacities.

Boyden was mentioned several times as a possible choice for secretary of state in the Hoover Cabinet.

MAY BAR IOWA

Chicago, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Iowa's football squad is preparing for what may prove to be its last game with a Western Conference opponent. On January 1, unless the Big Ten faculty committee on athletics changes its collective mind, the ban on Iowa's competition against conference teams will become effective as outlined last June when the Hawk Eye school was charged with having failed to conduct its athletic affairs as required by conference rules. So the school that wrecked Minnesota's championship hopes for the last two years and gave the championship Purdue eleven its toughest battle of the season will be making probably its farewell appearance in the league Saturday when it engages Michigan at Ann Arbor.

The conference faculty committee will meet in Chicago Dec. 6 and 7, to decide if Iowa has reorganized its athletic system to appoint where reinstatement may be possible.

Cubs May Alternate Groman, St. John At Quarter

Majors Also Troubled With List Of Injuries

Spillane Out With Broken Leg; Benevento and Saharek Nurse Injured Ankles; Kelley and Dwyer Have Problems.

The quarterback situation in the Cubs' camp still remains a mystery today. Coach Tom Kelley insisted this morning that he hadn't the slightest idea who would get the nomination for the south end eleven in the second game of the town football series against the Majors at Hickey's Grove next Sunday.

Jack Stratton, Groman insists he has fully recovered from the effects of his kidney injury three weeks ago and is both eager and ready for a chance to play.

St. John May Start. While Kelley maintained that he had no idea as yet who will play quarterback next Sunday, he intimated that it was possible either Danquist or Stratton would still decide to play.

The Majors are also having their troubles with injured men but their predicament is not believed to be nearly as bad as that of the south end team.

Benevento's Ankles Bad. Dr. A. B. Moran says that Jack Benevento, Mike Saharek and Tony Tamliensky are also in the injured list and should not play next Sunday.

Majors Have Hopes. The odds on the Cubs to take the title in two straight games have slimmered a little due to the Donnelly, Groman, Dahlquist, Stratton quartet being more or less certain losses, the champions still rule the favorites to retain the championship.

The schedule, announced yesterday by Elwood W. Kemp, Jr., secretary-treasurer of the league, provides for the customary 80 games among Pennsylvania, Dartmouth, Princeton, Yale, Columbia and Cornell.

PITT PANTHERS MAY GET ROSE BOWL CALL

MacMURDO PARKINSON WALINCHUS

NAN TAGGART SETS NEW BOWLING MARK

Rolls Score of 130 to Beat Jennie Schubert's 128 In Cheney Girls' League.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 20.—If the Pitt Panther is victorious in its remaining game against Penn State, and a splendid record indicates the prowling cat will be, Jock Sutherland's boys are looked upon as having an even chance to make the long trek across the continent for their second Tournament of Roses football game in three seasons at Pasadena.

Undeclared in its first six starts and with a total of 202 points scored against 23 by the opposition, the Panther aggregation fully would ably represent the east in this annual intercollegiate battle Nov. 29's Day in southern California. Thousands of loyal Pittsburghers and Panther fans question superiority of Notre Dame over Pitt. A game alone could settle that dispute.

In a certain respect the Panthers and the Ramblers are alike, in that both meet their opposition with a machine-like precision that is seldom matched on the gridiron. Both cleveans boast stars of the first rank, but in the general play the individual is overshadowed by the marked smoothness of the attack and defense as a unit.

Dr. J. B. Sutherland, he of the dental profession familiarly known as "Jock," has a team powerful in its running and aerial attack and well-nigh impregnable on the defense, as the combined scores of the opponents show. The team is made up of more than 11 players. The silent "Doc" has a wealth of manpower.

Ray Montgomery in the Panther forward wall has been termed the "perfect guard" by Coach Sutherland. Poked-faced Joe Donchess at end does his work so smoothly that he seldom excites attention from the stadium. Burly Jim MacMurdo, at a varsity tackle position in his sophomore year, has been a whole line in himself. Captain Luby Dimeolo, a guard, is a fiery leader, and with Daugherty, center, Collins, end, and Tully, tackle, lend able assistance to Montgomery, MacMurdo and Donchess in clearing the path of Sutherland's charging backs.

Big Tom Parkinson, a senior in his third year as varsity fullback, is almost certain to make the majority of All-America selections.

Pitt's season is almost identical with that of 1927 when the great Gibby Welch, All-America halfback, led his Panthers to the Pacific coast to meet Stanford in the Pageant of Roses classic. Pittsburgh had an unblemished record that year, except that Stanford won from them 7 to 6 in the Pasadena contest.

Parkinson, Edwards, Umsa, Montgomery, and Donchess were regulars of the great team Gibby Welch led against Stanford two years ago. They're winding up brilliant careers this fall and each would like nothing better than to make a crack at the western representative, be it California, Stanford or Southern California, in the great Pasadena bowl.

CONN. MUTUAL WILL OPPOSE REC FIVE ON OPENING NIGHT

Hartford Court Players Coming Here Thanksgiving Day Evening to Meet Clune's Teams.

Manager Ben Clune announced last night that the Connecticut Mutual Insurance Company of Hartford would send its girls' and men's basketball teams here Thanksgiving Day evening to oppose the Rec Five in the opening games of the 1929-30 season in Manchester.

A squad of ten players will be on the floor for the Rec Five which will be later cut to eight. The present squad consists of Ty Holland, Tommy Faulkner, Roy Norris, Harold Madden, Ding Farr, "Gyp" Gustafson, Ross Shirer, Jim Quish, Pete Conroy and Billy Dowd. The first five mentioned begins to look like the best combination.

The Rec Girls expect to have an even stronger team than last season. The Welles sisters, Miriam and Margaret, will be back along with Anne Serantoni and Viola Shearer from last season's regular. Etta Chidlow and Charlotte Foster are back from the 1928-29 squad. Newcomers are Jennie Kiszka, former Lowell Tech player, Evelyn Beer, Elizabeth Washlewich, Irene Buckland and Dorothy Hart. The girls will practice from 8:30 until 8 tomorrow night. The men will workout from 8:30 to 9 tomorrow and from 7 until 9 Friday night.

Young men who think they know their football were given a rather bad beating in the football question contest run by The Herald in connection with the first game of the town series. The honors went to a young woman and a ten year old boy.

Miss Linnea Carlson who works in the business office of The Herald had the nearest correct set of answers but due to the fact that she was a Herald employe another five dollar prize was given to the next best total—that supplied by Little George Graziadio of North Main street.

None of the 50 odd answers contained the correct score—19 to 0 for the Cubs—but the majority seemed to think that the south end team would win. The contest will be repeated this week Friday for the second game. Employees of The Herald will be barred from the next contest.

BEATS TWO BOXERS

Twin Falls, Iowa, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Bud Travis, Twin Falls, Iowa, qualified as the "Iron man" of western boxers last night by defeating two opponents in eight rounds. Travis had Tony Campos of Vallejo, Calif., out on his feet at the end of the second round of an eight round bout. The crowd was not satisfied so Curley Johnson of Boise was called in to complete the schedule and Travis won decision over him.

Yale Still Worried Over Booth's Injury

Eli Star's Charley Horse Still Exists; Practices Briefly In Street Clothes; Other Games.

BY WM. J. CHIPMAN

New York, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Headed by the forty eighth Yale-Harvard clash at Cambridge next Saturday's football card through the east is small but important, with success or failure for the season hanging in the balance in at least three of the games. Harvard always is ready to call it a good campaign when Yale can be defeated, and Lehigh and Lafayette feel the same way about each other. For this particular season, the Fordham-Bucknell game at the Polo Grounds assumes much the same importance despite the absence of any natural rivalry between the teams.

Rested for two days, Harvard this afternoon faces at least a dummy scrimmage with perhaps another hard session ahead tomorrow. Yale, which finished off a long drill yesterday with a dummy scrimmage, probably will wind up its hard work for its second objective game before sunset.

Interest at New Haven centered not so much about what the team was actually doing up the practice gridiron as in whether Albie Booth will be able to face the Crimson. Booth appeared at the field yesterday and went through a few formations in street clothes. Then he departed for the infirmary for further treatment of his Charley horse.

An odds on favorite two weeks ago to end Lafayette's run of ten straight victories, Lehigh now is groping about for an upset to pull itself through next Saturday's game against its rival.

The Villa Nova forces have been realigned for the clash with North Carolina State on Saturday, hoping for a scoring punch. Temple seems well prepared to give a good account of itself against Drake, champions of the Missouri Valley Conference.

The Navy expects a mediumly hard game against West Va. Wesleyan, its final dress rehearsal for the climax against Dartmouth.

Ohio Wesleyan, not so strong as last year, should serve the Army in the same manner a week before the Notre Dame game.

Approaching its final game against Bucknell on Saturday, Fordham has a perfect record except for two tie games, one with Davis & Elkins and another with West Va.

Boston College is a hot favorite over its city rival, Boston University, and Duquesne is expected to manhandle the Haskell Indians.

Harvard Men Relax. Cambridge, Nov. 20.—(AP)—The Harvard football team relaxed by a day of quiet at the Myopia Hunt Club yesterday in which mention of the Yale game Saturday was ban-

Harvard has 55,000 alumni and Yale has 35,000. Maybe that's why Yale seems to be getting along so nicely.

Head Coach Mal Stevens is concerned over the condition of Albie Booth, who has been on the injured list for more than a week with a leg muscle ailment. He has not been able to ride himself of it, and yesterday went through only two or three plays in street clothes before returning to the infirmary for further treatment.

Trainer George Connors says the backfield star will play against the Crimson team but his effectiveness is greatly in doubt.

Practice on new plays and perfection of a defense against Harvard maneuvers are on today's program. Coach Bill Webster has studied the Horwell offensive and is tutoring the scrubs for work against the Yale regulars.

McLennan and Bob Wilson are alternating at quarterback at the post Booth filled so brilliantly. Otherwise the team is unchanged from the lineup that took the field against the Princeton Tigers last Saturday.

HARMON RESIGNS CHICAGO POSITION

Chicago, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Paddy Harmon has seen his dream of a huge indoor sports arena become reality—in the erection of the $2,000,000 Chicago Stadium—but will watch someone else guide its affairs henceforth.

Harmon relinquished the presidency of the Chicago Stadium Corporation last night at the demand of the board of directors. He had held the post since the building was opened last March. He controls, he says, 42 1-2 percent of the stock and will continue as a member of the board of directors and the executive committee.

Harmon's successor was not named. A report that Tingly Brothers had invested heavily in the stadium corporation and would engage Jack Dempsey to replace Harmon has persisted but has not been substantiated.

FLOODS IN SO. WALES CAUSE MUCH DAMAGE

Cardiff, Wales, Nov. 20.—(AP)—Sudden floods, following 24 hours of torrential rainfall, exacted heavy property toll in southern Wales today for the second time in recent weeks.

Although there was only one death, there were many narrow escapes from drownings and damage to property and crops was widespread. Swollen by the rain into roaring rivers the small mountain streams rushed into the valleys, deeply inundating streets of many towns and villages.

A number of mines were suspended, other work was stopped, and houses and shops flooded. Inhabitants in many cases had to abandon their residences, and in other places took to upper stories.

A dam near Neath, on Duffryn lake, broke, releasing water which swept through the valley carrying everything before it. Much railway traffic was halted or hindered.

MORGAN WON'T COMMENT.

New York, Nov. 20.—(AP)—J. P. Morgan returned today from an extended visit to Europe.

Interviewed aboard the liner Olympic at Quarantine, Mr. Morgan declined to discuss the financial situation, explaining:

"I cannot gauge a situation like this in a few minutes. I must have time to give it thought."

Queer Twists
In Day's News

New York.—The most impressive spectacle America has had to offer to Edgar Wallace, English writer of mystery stories, is the way men and women came up smiling though ruined in Wall street. "I have never seen disaster faced with such courage and good humor; never heard fewer squawks."

Medford, Wis.—Unwilling to fight for Uncle Sam if need be, the Rev. Irodoian Marshallkevich, Russian orthodox pastor, has been refused citizenship. Judge Risjord decided that the pastor's offer to serve in the Red Cross was insufficient.

New Rochelle, N. Y.—Matrimony is preferred to a degree by William G. Caldwell, center on the Princeton football team, which has closed its season.

Mary Folke, which occurred during the height of the football season, is announced. He has left the university to go into business.

Mexico City.—Fernando Sotelo Regil, deputy for Campeche, has appealed to President Portes Gil to prohibit bullfights and cockfights as horrible spectacles incongruous to a civilized nation.

Boston.—Old Ironsides is to radiocast tonight over the WJZ network beginning at 9:30 o'clock. There will be a patriotic program on the gun-deck of the historic frigate with two bands, an orchestra and singing.

New York.—Theresa Helburn, executive director of the Theater Guild, expects the talkies to improve the stage. She believes there will be fewer theaters, but better ones, playing to more discriminating audiences. The theater must cease to be a business, it must become either an art or nothing at all.

New York.—An autographed mosaic of triangles, circles, parallelograms and spiders' webs purporting to be by President Hoover is on sale at a dealers.

The President has a habit of scribbling such designs on waste paper when listening to callers. As explained by the dealer, one visitor was so fascinated that he obtained the paper with the presidential signature. Then he sold it.

The price asked is described as a fair portion of the presidential salary.

New Haven.—Apropos of the furore over the theft of a bit of the old Yale fence from a photographer, Professor J. T. Berdan desires that inquiries be made in Cambridge as to whether something of Yale culture has finally arrived there. Perhaps the professor thinks Harvard is trying to get even. It was Yale that invented the fad of taking away goal posts, when a Yale football team won in the Harvard stadium after a series of defeats.

New York.—Colonel Lindbergh can drive an automobile as well as an airplane with one hand. He has motored about the city with his right arm in a silken sling. His soft shirt was open at the throat and innocent of a tie.

Belmont, Mass.—James Cash, Jr., of Omaha, student at the Harvard Law School, is quite a goifer. Would an unwanted disturbance hamper his game? Well, an earthquake, the only one he has played in, improved it. Just after he wallowed the ball from the tee of a par-three hole at Belmont Springs there came an earth tremor. Cash found his ball in the cup.

LICENSES SUSPENDED

A list of operators whose licenses to drive automobiles in Connecticut have been suspended for one year for driving while under the influence of liquor was given out today at the State Motor Vehicle Department as a part of the effort to reduce this highway menace.

The department statement advised people to notify the department or the police in case they should see any of these drivers operating motor vehicles.

FINE DOUBLE FEATURE
PROGRAM AT STATE

"Love Doctor" Starring Richard Dix, and "Bride of San Luis Rey" Show Tonight.

An attractive double-feature program, consisting of Richard Dix in "The Love Doctor," and Lily Damita, Ernest Torrence and Raquel Torres in "The Bride of San Luis Rey" opens a two-day engagement at the State today.

In "The Love Doctor," Richard Dix gives another farce comedy performance, the type which has given him the greatest success. Romance and comedy with plenty of honest humor that a child can understand, are the chief ingredients of the picture. Dix has wanted to make "The Love Doctor" for several years, and with the advent of the talkies, his dream is at last realized. The picture is a snappy farce of a young doctor and his society patients, suffering from all sorts of horrible ailments. The women he cures with kindly words; the men with lovely nurses. June Collyer, Morgan Farley, Gale Henry and Miriam Seegar have prominent roles in the supporting cast.

The filmization of Thornton Wilder's sensational "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" was bold experiment in film production, for all dramatic rules were cast to the wind in the making of this drama. And what the book is to literature, the new play was proved to be to the screen. For the first time success has been had in filming ideas and states of mind through the medium of human characters. It is gripping entertainment with comedy, pathos and thrills deftly mixed in. Lily Damita, Ernest Torrence and Raquel Torres, who have the three leading roles, deliver flawless performances, and the supporting which includes Henry B. Walthal, Tully Marshall, Emily Fitzroy, Mitch Lewis and Jane Winton, are likewise effective in their respective parts.

Judging by recent stock market activities, the lambs had better stick to their gambling and let gambling alone.

London, Nov. 20.—(AP)—The Stock Market opened cheerfully today, aided by the gradually growing belief the worst of the recent liquidation in the United States had passed and by the improvements in the international monetary situation. The Amazing Parrot

© 1929 by NEA Service, Inc.

By Anne Austin, author of "The Black Pigeon," "Rival Wives," etc.

THIS HAS HAPPENED
MRS. EMMA HOGARTH, miser, said to keep money in her room on the second floor of MRS. RHODES' boarding house, is strangled to death. BONNIE DUNDEE, "cub" detective, assisting LIET. STRAWN, attaches significance to the utterances "Bad Penny" made by CAP'N, the victim's parrot, when he finds in her diary reference to a mysterious "D" of whom she lived in dread.

"I'll stand by, no matter what they say she did," Magnus said earnestly.

Suspicion falls on EMIL SEVIER, former boarder whom Mrs. Hogarth accused of trying to rob her and who has left town hurriedly. CORA BARKER, theater pianist, also a boarder, is arrested as a material witness against Sevier, when she confesses she was in the murder room shortly after 12.

Other boarders under suspicion are HENRY DOWD, MR. and MRS. SHARP, NORMA PAIGE, latest heiress to the Hogarth hoard, who incurred the old woman's wrath because of her engagement to WALTER STYLES, financially insecure business man; BERT MAGNUS, amateur scenario writer, and DAISY SHEPHERD.

Dundee learns from Mrs. Rhodes of the mysterious manner in which Mrs. Hogarth received and sent mail, making the postman her only confidant. A long-distance call from a pay box in Chicago for Daisy the night of the murder adds suspicion. All boarders agree to remain on but Daisy, who packs and leaves. Dundee pays Styles a visit and finds him washing socks and a pair of gloves.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XXII
 "Oh, hello, Dundee! I'm glad to see you," Bert Magnus greeted his Sunday afternoon caller with surprising cordiality.

"I'm afraid I'm interrupting you again, Magnus," Dundee apologized as he took the comfortable, shabby armchair beside Magnus' desk. "But I believe I'd never get to pay you a visit if I didn't have the nerve to butt in. You're certainly an industrious chap."

"Industrious?" Magnus agreed with a bitter twist of his mouth. "And a fat lot it's got me. If I hadn't been so industrious last night, poor Cora wouldn't be in jail now. I'll never forgive myself for not meeting her after the theater as I promised. The truth is, I forgot everything when I'm absorbed in tinkering with this fool yarn of mine. In the world wouldn't make up to me for causing that poor girl one hour's stay in a dirty jail."

"I wish Cora could have heard him say that," Dundee thought, and polished them very hard to remove the moisture which had suddenly misted the lenses. Aloud he remarked: "She's charged only with being a material witness, you know, Magnus. I'm sure she can arrange bail the first thing tomorrow after court opens."

"I wish to heaven I had the money to go on her bail myself," Magnus worried. "But all the success hand distractedly through his dark-brown, oily hair. 'She wouldn't have been a material witness if I had kept my promise to her. Did she actually see Sevier crawling out of Mrs. Hogarth's window? That's the rumor about the house, believe?'"

"I'm sorry, but I can't tell you," Dundee answered truthfully. "But let's try to forget the whole miserable business. We can't catch the murderer or do poor Cora Barker any good by mulling it over. How's the story coming on?"

He glanced toward the battered old typewriter on the open roll-top desk.

"That's not the story," Magnus told him, glancing toward the sheet of paper rolled into the machine. "I was trying to frame a letter to my family in Riverside, California. They're likely to see newspaper accounts of the murder at the Rhodes House, and be worried about me. Finest family a chap ever had, Dundee. I'm the president of a Fruit Growers' Association now, and when I go home I guess I'll be content to take a job under him. Here's a picture of my older brother—known as Red! My funny little red mustache looks as if it had wandered from his face to mine. I know I look queer with a red mustache with this dark hair of mine, but—my mother had red hair."

He rambled on, showing more snapshots of the pleasant Spanish type of home, the "folks" in the family car, a police dog—

"I'm homesick for the devil," he acknowledged with a sigh, "but I've got a stubborn streak in me. I talked so big before I left home, and I hate to go back with empty pockets and this—"

He pointed to the crippled right hand, with a nervous gesture of contempt and self-loathing.

"Your hand was—hurt after you left home?" Dundee asked sympathetically, his eyes roving from the curled, withered fingers.

"Yes, and I've never had the nerve to write the family just how much damage I suffered in the accident. I feel like half a man, especially when I look at these pictures of Dad and Red. Splendid types, aren't they? It happened four years ago in Florida. I was traveling in a motor bus between Miami and Hialeah, on a real estate company's sightseeing tour. The bus collided with a heavy truck and was badly wrecked—turned over and the top caved in on us. Two of the passengers and the driver were killed outright. I thought I was lucky to get off with nothing worse than an injured hand—cut straight across the palm with a piece of the windshield glass, and he exhibited the scar."

"Rotten luck anyway," Dundee sympathized.

"Yes, the ligaments of the fingers were cut clear through, though I didn't realize it immediately. The fact is, when I came out of the ether at the hospital the nurse told me my folks were wiring frantically, and I dictated an answering wire to her—assured them I was well and got twenty or thirty thousand out of them. If I'd known how completely my hand was ruined."

"Can't you use it at all?" Dundee asked.

"Oh, some. The thumb is all right, and I use it to space with when I'm typewriting. But the fingers are useless. I learned to write with my left hand, or my career as a bookkeeper would have been ended forever. By the way, would you like to see the story I'm working on?" he asked with engaging eagerness.

Dundee shuddered inwardly, but his affirmative was cordial. "I'm afraid my typing is rotten," copying it over, thinking perhaps the bad typing was one reason the movie company turned it down. People are so prone to judge by appearances, you know. Here it is. What do you think of the title, 'More To Be Pitted'?"

"Fine!" Dundee applauded, but inwardly he groaned. "Was he going to have to read through his bulky manuscript?"

"I don't want to bore you," Magnus apologized, but the gray eyes behind the oval lenses were shyly eager, and Dundee could never bear to hurt anyone's feelings.

He made a pretense of skimming through the terrible, amateurish scenario, remarking, lest Magnus think he was turning the pages too fast: "I'm a quick reader. Ought to get me a job as a reader in a publishing house."

The story was so absurd, so hackneyed, so badly written, even as a scenario, that Dundee pitied with all his heart the man who so eagerly awaited the verdict.

Ashamed of his insincerity, but because those shy, eager eyes were pleading with him, Dundee read aloud, with apparent relish, the last paragraph of "More To Be Pitted":

"And so here, with the setting sun turning the window panes of the old homestead into squares of pure gold, the long hard trail ended. Little Madge was at home again, but not alone now. No longer could the fierce temper of her grandfather terrify her, for she had Big Buck of the Lonesome Hills to protect her, to shield her against every storm of life, to be the father of the new little lives which would one day make the old homestead ring with happy laughter." He laid the script down upon the desk. "That's a swell conclusion you have, Magnus. The fans will eat it up."

"Cora thought maybe I ought to have Madge and Big Buck walking hand in hand up the hill into the setting sun, with apple blossoms drifting down about them," Magnus worried. "What do you think?"

Seems to me like that's been done before."

"I think your own conclusion is fine," Dundee assured him mendaciously. "Oh, sorry!" he exclaimed, as his elbow knocked a book off the edge of the desk. He stopped to retrieve it, saw that the front cover had flown back, revealing the flyleaf, on which was inscribed: "Herbert S. Magnus, Riverside Calif., January 10, 1924." He closed the book and returned it to the desk, nothing that it was a textbook on scenario writing.

"You've been working at this game quite a while, I see," he remarked, hoping that the pity he felt did not show in his voice.

"Off and on. I subscribed for this course in 1924, but I've just lately got down to serious work. You see, I want to make some quick money, so I shall be ashamed to go home. And—well, maybe I'll take someone with me. There usually much, disgrace attached to a—a woman if she's held as a material witness in a murder trial, or do you know, Dundee?"

"I wouldn't worry about that," Dundee reassured him, extending a hand which the other gripped awkwardly with his left. "Cora needs you to stand by her now, and if you feel that way about her—"

"I'll stand by, no matter what they say she did," Magnus said earnestly, his gray eyes blinking rapidly behind his glasses.

"Poor devil!" Dundee groaned to himself as he made his escape. "This is the worst of the business I've elected. I'll be seeing innocent lives wrecked all the time—the flotsam and jetsam that washes ashore after every murder trial. . . . But he's going to have his girl, and Cora's going to get off with a clean skirt as possible, or my name's not Bonnie Dundee."

This resolve buoyed him up temporarily, but the new detective found it hard to wait with any degree of patience for the next scene in the drama. He had ideas of his own about searching every boarder's room for possible clues, but he could do nothing on Sunday. With his fellow-guests at work on Monday, and with Mrs. Rhodes' conviction, he would have a free hand Monday, too, would bring the postman, and he in turn should bring old Mrs. Hogarth's regular monthly letter from "S."

Sunday evening Dundee strolled down to police headquarters, endured a good deal of affectionate kidding from his uncle, Police Commissioner O'Brien, learned from Strawn that nothing new had developed, and that Sevier was still most emphatically missing. Dundee was discouraged. If he was right about the importance of the "Bad Penny" clue, then why was Emil Sevier a fugitive from justice?

Fortunately the first mail delivery was not until half-past nine on Monday, and Dundee was the only boarder who was watching for his arrival, as the stooped, gray little man plodded up the Rhodes House walk.

YOUR CHILDREN

by Olive Roberts Barton
© 1929 by NEA Service, Inc.

Children have a sixth sense. Beware—take care! When we think we're fooling them we're not kidding anyone along but ourselves, in popular parlance, and it must be awfully hard on them sometimes, keeping up the little fiction of pretending not to know the truth when all the time they're as wise as little owls.

Like the homely little girl who was entertaining her mother's callers and sat listening to their spangled conversation: "Not very p-r-e-t-y," remarked one indicating their small hostess.

To which she exclaimed quickly, "No, but very s-m-a-r-t!"

With which preamble we come to the subject in question.

A certain dean of a large university writes his experiences with parents. One of the things he resented most of all was the father who raised Cain when his son deceived him, but who allowed himself considerable license acknowledging that his children knew nothing about it.

The dean seems to agree about this sixth sense. "Children know things intuitively," he remarks. "And it's only foolish to think we're pulling the wool over their eyes and letting them think we are paragons of perfection!"

Of course, it's a big question.

The WOMAN'S DAY

Working girls are more concerned with how they shall be clothed than how they shall be fed, according to the Association to Promote Proper Housing for Girls, which has been investigating the living conditions of the working girl in New York City.

"The working girl," their report states, "economizes on food in order to have more attractive raiment. This instinct is sound as it is in itself a means of provision for the future—a means of attracting a husband. But it is a wonder how some working girls, paid the same salaries they are, manage to make themselves as attractive as they do."

Frances Perkins, head of the association, makes this point which is too often overlooked in considering the worker's problem: "Every human being should have the wherewithal to maintain life, and in addition to that, something to make life worth maintaining. For mere subsistence, a girl needs food, clothing and shelter. She should have of these sufficient quantity to insure, first of all, health, and after that, security—that is some assurance that the means of subsistence will not be withdrawn, and some provision against old age or misfortune, such as sickness or accident insurance or an endowment policy."

"All these things are outside the requirements for making life worth living. Included in the latter are such natural youthful recreations as dancing and social contacts generally. Such entertainments as music and the theater. Such adornments as beads and silk stockings—such luxury as leisure to rest and invite her soul (scarcely obtainable when one works eight hours and must sew, mend, wash, iron, clean one's room and often do a little cooking after working hours).

"She should be able to do these things, and then, the abandoned pleasure of generosity—that is to indulge her natural right of making a gift to somebody."

That last consideration seems to be the real vital of all—the abandoned pleasure of generosity. Only the person budgeted to the hit, who keeps away the wolf only a day at a time, and who has no Peter to rob to pay Paul, realize the value of generosity. It is not to be able to go into the florist's shop and order a basket of flowers for a sick friend, or how many generous impulses have to be sacrificed to the bleak necessity of keeping a roof over one's head, and not to feel that one is at that. There is indeed something defective in our civilization, something wrong with the economic machine, and something to view with alarm, when the worker, out of the effort she puts forth, and the amount she produces, cannot buy at least enough to feed and house herself—with a slight margin for generosity, to say nothing of an occasional extravagance.

We don't like to think of our children arriving at the conclusion that our life is a day—that we are of the earth earthy, and all that. We parents would like them to go on thinking that we have just stepped down from Olympus. But it's really a foolish attitude to take. Why not put them on common ground and admit that we are just as likely to make mistakes as they are. They'll respect us far more and like us far better and be far more frank about their own affairs.

It can't help thinking that this pose of perfection in parents, the idea that the king can do no wrong, is one of the biggest myths that ever was. It only keeps the children, especially the older ones, from coming to us with their affairs and makes confidence pretty well impossible.

I know one pair of parents who stay out on an average of three nights a week until two or three o'clock. They make an announcement next morning that they got home a little after twelve—just because they've given orders to their fourteen and sixteen-year-old son and daughter that twelve is the deadline on the door mat.

The Parental Pose

Another father, when he's late for breakfast, and of course, at the office, won't acknowledge it. He'll remark: "There's not much doing today in town. Doesn't matter whether I go at all or not." Won't let on that he overslept because he's always a little hard on the children when they do it, and besides he hates to be caught off his pedestal.

Of course we get into more serious things along this line. There's the ubiquitous cocktail-shaker. No use blinking that. It's a national institution. And where do all the shakers go from the 5 and 10 and department store? Into the Great American Home—three-fourths of them to be used by the great American parent.

Don't think the children don't know it. Of course they do. There's that sixth sense. Yet a good many parents are prepared to raise particular Cain if their sons go to college and light out on a few parents.

No—parents can't do what they don't want the children to do. The argument that they're older and privileged doesn't hold. And as I said, the alphas are no good. Children are s-m-a-r-t!

MENTAL TREATMENT IMPORTANT IN CURE OF DRUG ADDICTS
 BY DR. MORRIS FISHEIN
 Editor Journal of the American Medical Association and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

In 1927 the public was startled by the announcement that a new method of treating drug addiction had been discovered and that successful trials with this method in penal institutions in New York City had substantiated its success. Considerable doubt was expressed as to the real value of the method by various scientific publications. As a result, the mayor of New York appointed a committee to study the entire problem of the treatment of narcotic addiction. This committee, headed by Dr. Alexander Lambert, has just made available its final report.

The committee finds that most of the drugs and preparations forming the basis of the so-called specific cures for drug addiction have not any value in shortening the withdrawal symptoms or making them less painful. The quickest and simplest way is to withdraw the narcotic. The withdrawal takes place over a period of three days, during which there may be considerable mental and physical suffering and during which time the patient must have close medical attention. The most humane form of treating drug addiction is to withdraw the drug over a period of two weeks, during which progressively decreasing doses are given.

The disadvantages of this method are the time involved, the absence of the favorable psychologic effect of abrupt withdrawal, and the vigilance required to prevent the addict from obtaining more of the narcotic. No form of treatment seems to be worth while in stopping the craving for drugs. Sooner or later the desire returns again; and if the person gets the drug, he is likely to become an addict again. The real problem of ridding the addict of his habit permanently seems to be a psychologic and economic problem.

The conditions which cause the addict to crave the drug are unusually emotional or material circumstances. A correction of these circumstances is likely to prevent the recurrence of the craving. It is pointed out that many drug addicts are mentally disturbed or mentally inadequate, and that for this reason also the mental treatment is one of the most significant factors of the control.

THE TINYMITES

(READ THE STORY, THEN COLOR THE PICTURE)

The sled, still standing almost straight, sailed on through the air at quite a gait. The Tinymites were dangling down and hanging on real tight. A funny way to ride, that's true, but what else could the whole bunch do? The wind had blown the sled wrong and they couldn't make it right. "Aw, gee," said Clowny. "What fun's this? It seems that something goes amiss each time we take another trip. I think I've had enough. We've been in caves and sailed through air. In fact, we've been most anywhere. Why, even on the ocean blue when it was good and rough. "I only wish for once and all that we would gently fall right down to earth and stay there. I would never leave again. We'd build a little house of wood. That isn't hard. I'm sure we could. We'd simply lie around and play games now and then. "Oh, not for me!" another cried.
