"The Way I Heard It"

BY JOHN GRUBER

It's just a year since I started writing for the Herald. In fact, this represents the third weekly column about things musical, which has started with my byline. You've all been very nice about reading my efforts, and it looks as though you'll be sticking with them for another year too.

The big news story musically during that period was the dramatic demise of Leonard Warren on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera. His last performance was a great void which no one has filled successfully. And just a few days ago, James Braxton was dead. He will likewise be missed.

I recall seeing the pair of them in "Tosca" a few years ago at the "Met" with Renata Tebaldi in the title role. This was about as fine a cast as could be assembled today, and the performance was excellent. Warren was particularly fine as "Scarpia."

Last winter the same opera was from your rushing pretzels and beer to him as he watches the TV. Drumk Symphony Orchestra, Cleveland Orchestra, Stall, Conductor, EPIC 80 008.

Everybody is familiar with Drumb's "New World" Symphony (or at least they ought to be) but not so many realize that he wrote a couple of other excellent symphonies as well.

Epic has done a grand job of putting the three best ones together in an LP album. They are the 2nd, 4th, and 5th. The last one is the "New World" in case you don't know it by number.

They require three discs, so they are not obtainable for a pittance. But maybe Santa Claus will bring them to you, that is if you put the suggestion to him. Or perhaps you'll want to play Santa Claus yourself.

Braxton Symphonies, Columbia Arch., Rena Walter, cond., Columbia MCL 325.

About a year ago, Columbia offered the complete series of nine of Braxton's symphonies by this same aggregation. Now they're offering the four by Braxton if anything the orchestra plays better than they did a year ago. After all, Braxton's music has been working with them for a longer time.

I viewed rhapsodic over the Beechthorn offering, but something the Braxton just misses the boat. Of course Braxton was a great artist. This may have something to do with it. The performance and interpretation are exemplary, and the introduction to the last movement of the 1st Symphony is a fine example of the composer's own interpretation. Perhaps he'll like you to over-rehearse "My" or "I" mean the album in general.

There is a Teutonic thoroughness about it which only serves to emphasize Braxton's mastery of musical contrivance and lack of true inspiration.

The whole thing is as flawless as fine marble, but it also has something of the coldness of marble as well. It is a monument to Braxton, but a monument is frequently to be found in a cemetery.

Unions End Strike At Penn. Railroad

Then management and labor together with the mediators and the mayor, went into the hall—and slammed the door. In the face of the press. A half hour later, with both sides beaming, a long list of agreed-upon points, O'Neill said bluntly: "A satisfactory agreement has been reached, subject to ratification of the unions... the strike is over."

Quill said he would have the okay of his 46 PRR locals "in a couple of hours" before the morning's over.

Quill, obviously happy, said "this strike and settlement may very well be the turning point for updating labor relations on the nation's railroads."

He said the unions won protection against the Penna. contract to outside firms working for PRR employees can do themselves a severe pay plan for protection of railroad workers protection for mechanics helping against abolition of their jobs, and a rule that defines in specific terms an employee's job.

In addition, Quill said, the railroad agreed to drop law suits totaling $14 million against the union.

The agreement totals more than 30 points, all touching on job security and work rules.

Symes, declining to express any personal view of the agreement, except to say "it was satisfactory," quickly announced that he would be in New York and St. Louis to Washington, to the South, to the West, to New England "to be resumed as soon as possible."

The PRR normally operates 722 passenger trains and 87 freight trains daily.

It placed the total revenue loss at about $25 million each day—or about $30 million altogether.

However, it didn't have much of a payroll—having furloughed 52,000 workers as soon as the strike began last night.

The railroad was protected by insurance taken out several years by the major carriers. This paid most of the fixed expenses reckoned at about $600,000 daily.

The strikers lost about $4 million in salary.

Besides the furloughed PRR workers, another 20,000 employees in industries which relied on the Penna. for shipping were idled by the strike. Some may not get back to work for several days, until freight is moving normally again.

James P. Nevel, PRR vice president, operations explained the reason for the strike was the union's demand for new ratification of service this way:

"During the period preceding

operation of regular trains, test runs will be made to clean the rails of rust. This is necessary to guarantee proper functioning of electrical circuits in the tracks which control signals, automatic highway gauges and warning lights, and other safety devices which operate through continuous contact of train wheels with the rails.

Symes asserted that no train will operate unless it is safe.

The strike began on a bitter note, with both sides naming the other for its start. Shortly after pickets marched around PRR property, Quill accused Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell of telling lies about the union demands. He said Mitchell was throwing the weight of the Eisenhower administration against the strikers.

Mitchell had said Quill was unreasonable in his dispute with the PRR and disregardful of the public welfare.

"The dispute had been heard by an impartial arbitrator and a special fact-finding board appointed by President Eisenhower. The railroad had agreed to settle on the recommendations of both these agencies—but the union refused. Four times it postponed it."

Sheinwold on Bridge

GREAT TROUBLE
WEST OPEN ARMS
By Alfred Sheinwold

"Don't meet trouble halfway," says the old proverb, but it isn't good advice for bridge players. In some situations at the bridge table the only way to save yourself is to meet trouble head-on.

West opened the queen of hearts, and South counted his tricks. He saw seven top cards, with good chances for additional tricks in diamonds, clubs and even spades.

South refused the first trick but won the next heart and led a diamond. This is where West muffed his opportunity. He played his low diamond, hoping the bogeyman would go away if he paid no attention to it.

There was no such luck. Declarer finessed dummy's eight of diamonds, and the defenders were washed up.

If East won with the jack of diamonds, declarer would get four diamond tricks. This would be enough to make a good try to recover by refusing to take the jack of diamonds. This limited South to three diamond tricks.

Declarer had a shrewd idea of what was going on and switched to clubs, ducking the first round of the suit to West. Back came a heart, and South won.

Now South took the top clubs and gave up a club to East. There was no need to risk his spades unless he tried this for South was sure of three clubs, three diamonds, two hearts and one spade.

West could have done a lot better if he had stopped up with the queen of diamonds on the first round of that suit. This would limit South to two diamond tricks instead of three or four.

You might remember this play the next time you hold Q-x of a suit right under dummy's long suit headed by A-K-10 or by A-J-10. Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You

Rooftop Stork Heralds Twins

When twin babies arrive, some parents are proud enough to announce it from the rooftops.

On Oct. 30 in Vernon there's a house where the stork is on the rooftop. And with a spotlight on it.

The "announcement" is a wood stork carrying twin babies in a diaper, an apparition about to land a pile of hay.

The real babies who arrived Aug. 29 are Timon, 11 and Thomas, 7. The stork children of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Siders.

The Siders themselves had nothing to do with the roof announcement. Mr. and Mrs. George Malchuk put up the stork. The Malchuk and the Siders have been warm friends since the Siders moved into the ranch eight months ago.

Mrs. Siders told the Malchuk she decided to put up the stork figure, not to welcome the babies but to show the stork a measure of affection.

They contacted Dick Sandberg, of Ellington who whittled the 21-foot figure from wood. Three days after the twins arrived the Malchuk slipped over to the Siders and put up the stork complete to spot light.

When the Siders saw it they were delighted by the prank. They decided to wait until both babies were home before taking the stork down.

Timon came home from Manchester Memorial Hospital Friday. Thomas will come home sometime this week.

Although the stork might not last until Malchuk comes home, the Malchuk was afraid of hurting the Siders' feelings. He explained the stork to the Siders so far. He said the stork will be held every Monday night at the high school.

On easy FHA terms you can pay as little as $5.00 a month for a new burner. Phone MI 9-5495 or TR 5-8271 for further facts.
