34 DEPOT SQUARE - MANCHESTER

By ERIC GOTTGETREU Associated Press Staff Writer JERUSALEM, Israeli Sector (AP)-A thaw has developed in German-Israeli relations. The two countries have no diplomatic relations, but officials have been trying to change this. "We must be realistic," said an Israeli diplomat, "we need West Germany now. We need what it can give us." What has prevented recog-

if it recognizes Israe!, the Arab states will recognize East Germany. This might force Bonn to sever relations with the Arabs. The West German government against even token recognition of the Communist regime. Most of Israel's 2.5 million citizens have long since buried bitter memories of concentration camps and the slaughter of ews by the Nazis, and have gone along with the government's policy to better relations with Germany. Israelis have visited Germany

West Germany has said that as tourists, and many Germans have come to Israel. This is a far cry from the early 1950s when the first two semiofficial visitors from Germany were invited here by the government. They slipped in and out of the country so quietly that many c'tizens weren't even aware of heir presence. Now German of ficials are greeted with public German students have been farm hands on Kibbuzim (colective settlements). So far only limited number of Kibbuzim have accepted the Germans. A unanimous vote is required by settlement members. Any opposition generally comes from older members, many of whom survived Nazi concentration camps and don't want to be reminded of them even by the sound of a German word. The executive committee of the Students Association at the Hebrew University found itself in hot water when it decided that two German students, enjoying the privileges of inexpensive quarters in a hostel; must move out because of their nationality. The public and press denounced the decision racialist and intolerant. The association immediately reversed itself, forced its chairman to resign, apologized to the remain in the hostel.

By coincidence, the thaw between the two countries has coincided with the end of a 1952 reparation agreement under which Germany agreed to deliver $700 million worth of capital goods to help the develop-ment of Israel. The German overnment has also helped imrove relations with its multibillion dollar program which provides compensation for vicmitted claims, nearly 80 per cent of them Jews.

Anti-German elements in Iarael, however, have been capi-talizing on the fact that German scientists are working in Egypt on President Gamal Abdel Nasser's missile program. Israel this summer urged Bonn to recall them, and when the Bundestag adopted a resolution supporting legislation for such a move, Israel-German relations were further improved. Critics of the thaw, however have other complaints. They claim that there still are too many Nazis serving in high official posts in Germany. They say many German text books and teachers tend to gloss over and teachers tend to gloss over the crimes of the Hitler era.

The Klatsch As Conference

For the second time, President Lyndon. Johnson has mirmmoned those news reporters who happened to be in the White House on their routine jobs into an inner office where they found themselves inside an informal presidersial coffee cup press conference. This is in contrast to the huge formal affairs, always scheduled well in advance, and always attended by a vast auditorium full of people from all the news media, which became something of a national institution under both residents Eisenhower and Kennedy. Under the past two Presidents, this press conference, conducted live on television so the whole nation could see it if it wished to, became one of the most valuable and interesting institutions in our democracy.

It showed the people their President engaged in a kind of open exchange with the nation itself which had hitherto never been possible in this country. We had always rather envied the way the leading executive in the British form of government, the Prime Minister, could always be called to account, and could always use the rostrum there to

For that the live press conference had become a rather wonderful substitute, in this country.

It had its faults. But, with both Eisenhower and Kennedy these faults, such as they were, lay more with the press than with the President. Some members of the press seemed to specialize in inane, repetitive questions, as if all their readers or listeners were morons. Some of the questioners were obviously seeking not answers from the President, but a spotlight for themselves.

But, on the plus side, the live press conference provided the country with this real opportunity to see the man who was President in his own real dimensions. And, even more on the plus side, it gave the man who was President a great opportunity to shine with the inner sanity, the proven decency, the sincere dedication which was a mark of the service of both men.

Both Eisenhower and Kennedy said more significant and meaningful things, and exhibited more real national thought and mood leadership, in the seemingly casual atmosphere of the press conference than they did in many of their set speeches or appearances. All that we should hate to lose.

So, without denying to President Johnson the right to choose his own methods and instruments of communication, and without denying that it is somewhat refreshing, to tell the truth, to have him choosing his own methods and routines, we still cling to the hope that, in time, as he warms to and perhaps feels more secure in his relationship to his job and to the nation, he too will permit a measure of open interplay between the Presidency and the people. So far as the nation has already seen and judged him in his relatively informal, off-the-cuff moments, he has nothing in particular to fear from the full press conference process, and might well be as much of a gainer from it as his two predecessors certainly were.

No Advantage To Anybody

There can be no sanity in rejoicing over the fact that Moscow, too, can have its public disturbance involving question of race.

Such dramatic proof that the purported glories of the Communist way of life do not, after all, include any full brotherhood of man is not much more beneficial to us than have been earlier disclosures about the very civilized people of Britain, who discovered, to their own chagrin, that they could be capable of racial prejudice, too, when the character of their population gave them op-There is a certain inverse comfort in -

of it, if possible, everywhere. The only nation in the world which ought to be conceded to be unscrupulous enough and uncaring enough to try to use this kind of weakness against us, when it shows here, or against Britain, when it shows there, or against Russia, when it shows there is Communist

And this is precisely what Communist China is busy trying to do, right this moment, with Chou's visit to Africa, with the incessant Chinese Communist propaganda line claiming that only under the benign guidance and leadership of the yellow race can all the other races find equality and freedom. Anyone, anywhere, has to be heartless to try to erect that kind of power politics or sphere of influence advantage on the racial issue. It is, for men and nations who pretend to some moral values, as much of a fault to rejoice in the imperfections of others as it is to maintain those imperfections in one's own conduct. Here in this country the North commits a sin if it indulges in the smug theory that the racial problem is something which needs to be solved only in the South. The only true and completely pertinent statement on racial issues is a sweeping one, that all humanity is involved in it everywhere, And the stakes are not really those of the relative position of one race or another, but that of the survival of

Are We Still People?

Dr. Caryl Parker Haskins, a scientist who succeeded Vannevar Bush as head of the Carnegie Institution of Washington in 1955, has discussed the whole question of this nation's scientific research effort in his latest presidential report, and what he is afraid of makes

He is afraid that the massive automation of our American devotion to that kind of research which seems to promise the largest immediate headlines may plunge too much of our research taent into great government-sponsored programs which may not, after all, hold the real key to the future. Once Dr. Haskins wrote the following

"It is the gifted unorthodox individual in the laboratory or the study or the walk by the river at twilight who has always brought to us, and must continue to bring to us, all the basic resources by which we live." That is still close to his theme in his present annual report, which deals both with specific proposals and general principles. One of the specific proposals which draws his scorn is that of the White House Office of Science and Technology urging that we double the number of doctoral degrees in the physical, engineering and mathematical sciences in the next decade. Just to train this many graduate students. Dr. Haskins estimated, would take 40 per cent of the scientists we now have active in research.

But, if we let the federal government alone with its appetite for research and researchers we might not have scientists left over available for anything, Dr. Haskins said.

We Americans, he said, "are firmly wedded to massiveness, and our long and triumphant experience in developing vast technology leads us easily to equate success in research with sheer magnitude of effort."

But, he said, the major advances "must inevitably rest, in the future as they have in the past, in the hands of a comparatively few highly original and gifted men and women a minuscule proportion of the entire scientific popu-"A society committed to the search for truth must give protection to and set a high value upon, the independent and original mind, however angular, however rasping, however socially unpleasant it may be; for it is upon such minds, in large measure, that the effective search for truth depends."

Some of us, perhaps, are less concerned with our real rate of scientific progress, vital as that is to our civilization, than with the whole question of whether we as a people or a nation or a civilization still retain any freedom of choice in our own goals and destinies. Are we still people? Do we all still have any choices, individual or collective? Or are we already hopelessly captive to that moral and intellectual automation which runs far ahead of the automation in our factories, and puts not our flesh and hands, but our wills, out of work?

Time To Speak Out

And for the aldermen to listen. The Board of Aldermen will hold a public hearing tonight on the proposed 1964 municipal budget. They will hear great deal.

Most of what they will hear will concern the unsatisfactory educational budget adopted by the Board of Finance after it ignored or discounted the recommendations of the Board of Education. In the aftermath of an in vestigation by the National Education Association, the imposition by the Waterbury Teachers Association of sanctions on the local system and the general displeasure with Waterbury's niggardly support of educational facilities, he Finance Board's budget is virtually an insult.

Reduction of correct expenditures for some items, slashing of school board re quests and the legerdemain over the teachers' salary increments has made the proposed 1964 budget chaotic and - WATERBURY RE-
