Oration To The Tax Collectors

Washington is by no means getting used to President Johnson's habit of expressing himself at length and at random and on a wide variety of subjects in the strangest places and connotations, but we think we are beginning to like it. If it has value, it has that value because it gives press, people and country a chance to speculate about the President the man as well as the political leader and the official. We like to think we can begin to put the Johnson mind and heart in certain classifications where we can rely upon them for some consistency; we like to think we begin to know what the new President i really like, and what his own experience and blood are going to tell him to do before he tells us what he has decided to do.

Perhaps the most notable of these impromptu presidential performances came in the extended but obviously extemporaneous remarks President Johnson made, the other day, to field officials of the Internal Revenue Service. It will probably become known, in lasting perpetuation of the strange juxtaposition of subject matter and audience, as 'President Johnson's Address to the Tax Collectors."

The tax collectors were the excuse. The President was talking through and over them. He was talking to himself for his own reassurance, for his own elarification of how he felt and thought. He was talking to the nation, and to the world. And what he was talking was platitude and corn, some of the time, and saving sanity some of the time, and, now and then, pretty neat wrap-up of pretty complex situations or subjects.

The Oration To The Tax Collectors contained, for instance, President Johnson's latest homily on the issue of civil rights. The big story of our times has never been more movingly expressed, and we quote this portion:

"The best way for you to understand how the other fellow feels is to put yourself in his place for a while and see how you would feel under similar cirsumstances. That is not only true of those who have suffered from ignorance, poverty, disease and illiteracy but that is true also of those who have suffered from discrimination - discrimination in schools, discrimination in housing, diserimination in employment, discrimination in public accommodations.

"I tell this story because it is a rather touching personal experience that I have had. One of the great ladies that have known is kind of chief of staff of our operation, our house.

"She has been with us 20 years, she 🗯 a college graduate, but when she comes from Texas to Washington she never knows where she can get a cup of coffee. She never knows when she can go to a bathroom. She has to take three or four hours out to go across to the other side of the tracks to locate the place where she can sit down and buy a meal.

"So the time has come in our national life when we have to make our Bill of Rights real, when we have to make our Declaration of Independence come true, when we have to make our Constitution a living document. We have to do unto others as we would have them do unto

From this, our prime domestic probem-one problem which will have everything to say about whether this Amerca of ours can survive-the President's Oration to the Tax Collectors eventually found its way to the great summit world saue of our times.

We quote again:

"We have said to every thinking man in this Government that we want to follow the road to peace. We are going to yearn for it-not just yearn-we are going to search for it.

"We know that Mr. Khrushchev can till a hundred million people in Western Gurope in a matter of minutes. We know he can kill a hundred million people more or less in a matter of minutes. We know we can kill a hundred million people in Russia, in the Soviet Union, in a mather of minutes.

"This," the President added scomful-

Something that might be closer to statesmanship was demonstrated in the way the President himself, in this Oration to the Tax Collectors, discussed some of the specific crises of the past few weeks, and then made this sort of summary statement: "We expect those things, and we are not the last word, and we cannot expect to mash a button and have our wishes carried out all over this globe. "All we can do is expect to do what is right, what is honorable, what is enlightened, and that is what we are do-

So long as that is what President Johnson tries to do, he will find the American people sympathetic and understanding and intelligent and courteous, even when those tax collectors of his come around.

Even Where We Are Wanted

Our presence in Guantanamo, or in the Canal Zone, finds us in situations where we are officially unwelcome.

Whatever we may have done for Cuba or for Panama in the past does not count, and whatever good we may mean for the future of either country is not recognized. We have legal presence in each country, but it is regarded as trespass on our part.

In South Korea, on the other hand, we are supposedly officially welcome. We have supposedly just participated in saving the country. Our presence there is supposedly something South Korea and South Koreans want more than we Yet recently the problem of maintaining security and law around the military bases we maintain in South Korea for the defense of South Korea has led to some shooting by our sentries, and, in three incidents a 34 year old mother has been killed, a 17 year old boy has been killed, and a 12 year old boy wounded by buckshot. Only in the latter case do our military authorities accuse our sentries of having acted improperly. In the case of the two deaths, they were shooting to safeguard property and security after warning and warning shots had failed. The mother had apparently been taking part in the theft of a 21-foot section of pipe. The boy killed had, with a companion, cut his way through the barbed wire and made his way inside a very important military installation.

His surviving companion said that they had been rabbit hunting. Our authorities do not believe it. But the South Koreans have twisted the thing about. "Do they take Korean boys for rabbits ?" asked one South Korean newspaper in bitter attack on the action of our sentries. .

In such incidents, there is one subsidiary question which always has to be asked. Would the sentries fire with equal speed and accuracy if they were doing duty among a population with which they felt a greater ethnic kinship? But the main conclusion to be made from such incidents, and from the somewhat threatening way our supposed friends, the South Koreans, are building up resentment over them, is an old and standard conclusion which all big nations have to learn sooner or later, by one method or another. It is this: friend or foe, no people can welcome forever the armed presence of an outside nation. And sometimes such a presence itself eventually turns friend to foe.

The Logistics Of Nostalgia

The enchantment of the nostalgic is so powerful that it is sometimes hard to persuade people not to take the stray return to yesterday as the firm basis for building tomorrow.

Certain news from the Congo, for instance, is of the sort which might tempt many Americans, including some currently on the front line of political ambition, to go out and organize a movement to rebuild America's preparedness from the ground up.

What happened over in the Congo was that a savage's arrow chose combat with a twentieth century helicopter, and, by a strategic slit through an oil line, brought the marvelous modern contraption down to earth.

But before we all rush out to equip ourselves with bows and arrows against all that modern weaponry for which no modern answer has ever been developed, we must be realistic.

We must be realistic enough to concede, first, that it is indeed quite possible for an arrow to bring down not only a helicopter, but even, for all we know, such a thing as an intercontinental ballistic missile, or a rocket speeding toward the moon. Something frequently happens to such things, and it could be an ar-

But the second piece of required realism admits that, for an arrow to accomplish such a feat, a bit of luck is re-

One does not, then, make it a settled policy for the future to battle all helicopters with arrows.

Qualifications?

So far as we can discover, her image So far as we can discover, her image as an aspirant for the White House is fatally deficient of comph. . . What, for instance, is her golf handicap? Can she ride an electric horse, as Coolidge did? Or fling a medicine ball around in the Hoover manner? Does she dig touch tackie? What is her current inventory of deep freezes, mink coats, oriental rugs and hi-fi sets? . . To be sure, the can-didats from Maine bakes delicious blue-berry muffins, but that talent has never -SAN FRANCISCO

Which is all Bushkin ever wanted out of life. His business wanted out of file. His business is playing the plano his own way for people. And playing it right now, with you at a table listen-ing to it. The trouble was, Joe started making too much money doing this. In 1961, after 30 years of playing for people and being known as one of the great musicians in the country, he de-cided he wanted to get ou. of saloons so he could be with his kids when they woke up in the morning. He stayed home and started to write music for tele-vision. He lives in Old West-bury, L.I., with his wife rid four daughters and there were things like horses and barbe-cues. It is a great place for kids to grow up, and Joe was always up in the morning with them. This is supposed to be the
