South Windsor Orchard Hill Opens As School Resumes

Double sessions will start on Monday at the Orchard Hill school children Monday with the opening of the new Orchard Hill school. Construction of the 24-classroom school was begun April 22.

One wing of the building is equipped with movable partitions. The aim of the design is to provide for the possibility of team teaching. The movable partitions will allow conversion of a standard size classroom into a bigger area for instruction of large numbers of students.

Orchard Hill includes a library, music room and reading guidance office. There also is a cafeteria, administrative offices and gymnasium including stage.

The Orchard Hill School Library will be the only library staffed by mothers acting as librarians on a rotating basis. Mothers will staff the library from 9:15 to 10 a.m. and from 1:20 to 2:30 p.m. every day of school.

During the morning hours the primary grades on the first floor will receive a one-half hour literary period. This period is a new and eight will receive three-quarters of a hour per week. Children also will obtain passes from their teachers to study or do reference work.

Instruction will begin in the primary grades on the use of the library. A cross-index card catalog file is being compiled in all books in the library. The library will be open the first day of school and will have approximately 900 books.

Books of Education has bought 600 books for the school. 100 books will be borrowed from the state library and teachers are allowing their personal books to be placed on the shelves.

Mothers acting as librarians include Mrs. Olive Hobby, Mrs. Francis Dutton, Mrs. Charles Ems, Mrs. Doris Rivolis, Mrs. Marcia Fisher, Mrs. Charles Phillips, Mrs. E. E. Turner, Mrs. Dorothy Armstrong, Mrs. George Smith, Mrs. Paul Thomas, Mrs. John Gordon, Mrs. Thomas Boquet, Mrs. Kaye Keefe, Mrs. William Sullivan, Mrs. Byri Bragg, Mrs. Michael Harriet, Mrs. Sylvia Viner, Mrs. Ralph Tartaglia, Mrs. Robert Gurka, Mrs. Charles Anderson, Mrs. John Colby, Mrs. James Golden, Mrs. Theresa Eno, Mrs. Aldo Frario, Mrs. Leonard Cost, Mrs. Barlock, Mrs. Rose and Mrs. Walter Pota.

Rec Unit Okays Bathhouse Plan

Revised plans for the new Globe Hollow bathhouse were approved last night by the Advisory Park and Recreation and Park Commission, and will be presented to the board of directors Tuesday for its acceptance.

A previous two-story design for the 32 by 93 cent block building, had to be scrapped because professional estimates of its cost ranged as high as $60,000, far above the $35,000 allocated for the project.

The revised plans call for a one-story structure with no basement, and are basically the same plans suggested last fall by Recreation Superintendent Herdic said that the board of directors gives him the go-ahead Tuesday, he expects to be able to put the project out for bid immediately, perhaps the next day.

The structure would be of a comparatively simple construction, and, if started upon immediately, could be ready for the 1964 swimming season. The advisory board reiterated its January suggestion that the department sell $5 family seasonal-swimming admission, to be good at all three town-owned pools, provided that the Globe Hollow bathhouse is completed in time.

The practice of charging for swimming at Verplanck and Salters Pools, with free swimming at Globe Hollow, when completed, improvements at Globe Hollow will be to modernize the pool.

When completed, improvements at Globe Hollow will be to modernize the pool. Tickets for the Connecticut Interscholastic Conference basketball tournament will be on sale at the high school. South Windsor will play the winner of the Ellington-Warwick night game to be played Friday night. The local team will play at Manchester at 8:30 p.m. Monday.

Purim Party Temple Beth Hillel will hold a Purim party for children of the Temple and the Sisterhood, Sunday at 2:30 p.m. at the Avery Street School.

nobody catches anybody and convicts anybody of having done it, but it seems a rather valid assumption that the fact that the non-operating unions of the railroad went on strike 18 months ago, whereupon the management of the railroad began operating with non-union personnel, probably has something to do with the recurrent friction between the railroad's road bed and dynamite.

As to how such a struggle could last so long and develop into such bitter violence, there are several explanations. One would suspect that the union organizations and personnel involved are on the tough and lawless side, to say the least.

And one would suspect, if one happened to be tuned in on a television glimpse of the chairman of the Florida East Coast board the other night, that management in this controversy is somewhat to the right of the fondreams of the typical Goldwater man.

What goes on in Florida, in other words, is the worst kind of labor relations tragedy, a conflict between two sides neither of which even begins to speak the language of the other, with each side even reflecting all possibilities of mediating for fear any neutral mediator might be reasonable, with the other side retaliating against any and every attempt to mediate with brutal dynamite, as if dynamite were persuasive.

WASHINGTON—The hysterical reaction set off by one of the most important of the Panama Canal Zone's recent developments, that tensions there be eased in the foreseeable future.

The Zone's, the colonial-minded Americans who work for them in the Canal Zone, are shouting bloody murder over Washington's proposal that Panamanians be placed on the Canal Zone police force for the first time. If the Zone and its noisy allies in Congress are so agitated by this timid move, it's not likely that the Administration will attempt more daring reforms any time soon.

Actually, no reform can completely eliminate the potential for trouble in Panama. Justification of the 1904-1914 Panama Canal Zone with Panama City is a constant source of irritation that periodically can be fanned into violence by Communist agitators. That's why top officials in Washington are unanimous in believing that the Panama Canal, a lock canal vulnerable to sabotage, must be replaced by a sea-level canal and progress rapidly (all of which is highly unlikely) still would depend entirely upon the old canal at least until 1976.

In the interim, the U.S. must try to reduce tensions in the Canal Zone. The Canal Zone is now a 30 by 40 Panamanian on a newly expanded police force of about 300 men (compared with the present 180) would be a halting first step.

First reactions to this were encouraging. Rep. Lenor Bullington, Democrat of Missouri, chairman of the House subcommittee handling Canal Zone affairs, entered into a letter when Army officials tipped her off in advance. If Panamanians could meet such requirements, she said, it sounded fine.

As soon as the word was made public, however, the shrieks of the outraged Zoneans began to pour in. Mrs. Sullivan was inundated by telegrams and letters, many of them testing that not even the best Panamanians could serve two countries.

Elections A La De Gaulle

Among the other horrible things being credited to President de Gaulle of France—and not always seeming quite so ridiculous as it once was—has been the de Gaulle system for conducting a presidential election and for giving radio and television time to the political opposition.

Under the new French Constitution, a popular election of a new President is to be held no later than 1965. But President de Gaulle can choose to hold it earlier than that, if he wishes.

Whenever it is held, the campaign before the election is to last, by law, for only two weeks.

And only during these two weeks can the opposition parties and candidates get time on radio and television to try to make their own case and appeal to the voters.

The government itself operates all radio and television in France. That circumstance makes it rather easy for the government to decide that speeches by its own leaders and potential candidates are not political in nature, or part of any campaign.

Only during the two weeks of the official campaign, however, could opposition candidates get to a microphone on a camera.

When this official two weeks arrives, each candidate will be entitled, in that two weeks, to a total of 100 hours of time. That would, of course, make 24 five minute appearances, which, upon reflection, may be quite enough.

The worst problem a potential opposition candidate in France has to solve is that of when and how to try to sell himself so that when he finally does appear for his two hours in his two weeks people won't think he is a complete stranger. If de Gaulle postpones the election until 1965, this is no easy task. If he decides to hold it this summer, this is already too late.

One gentleman who is determined to run against President de Gaulle, or his successor, has begun making campaign speeches now. And government radio and television does concede to carry the speeches. But it is not so easy to get on the air. In fact, the government has to get some criticism of de Gaulle and the Gaullist policies going, but so far as radio and television are concerned, he got nowhere.

To those aspects of this system which are not political in nature, but which are political in nature, he has to be ready to defend himself. He has to be ready to defend himself. He has to be ready to defend himself.

FINISHED SCULPTURE: "Torso, Steel," By David Hayes

A MOMENT OF graceful entry into water seems to be the final suggestion of the sculpture "Torso, Steel," by David Hayes, which was unveiled at the workshop in 1960. Two of the stages of the sculpture in progress were pictured on this page Wednesday and Thursday, with the artist in the midst of his rough work with forge and hammer and anvil and shears. Out of this rough work came this swift form. The most recent news about the Manchester sculpture is that the artist, David Hayes, has completed his work in Paris, in a special show in Paris titled "Eggs Americana in Paris."

 That Bad Left

MIAMI, Fla.—Sunny Liston's blood-flecked eyes stared out of a vacant jewelry expression while he massed Cassius Clay. White double laces dopped against the top of his boxing shoes as Sunny put that left foot closer to Clay and out down the distance the kid was trying to keep. Liston threw a left hook. It caught Clay on the side of the head. Pretty good punch. Sunny threw another left hook. It went the same spot. Pretty good shot again. Then he let the right go. Clay blocked it with his glove. Sunny's left hand weight all coming to his left as he followed through with the missed right, loaded up with an other left hook. It caught Clay in the face. A real good ball. One more punch on top of it, and Clay would have been out of there. This was in the fourth round at Miami Beach Tuesday night.

The fifth round, the one Clay told his corner he did not want to come out for, started with Liston following Cassius along the ropes, cutting down that distance again and tied going with a left jab. The first one made a snapping noise and it caught Clay right between the eyes. So did the one right after. Clay backed away. He looked like he wanted to leave the place, right there.

In the next round, the sixth, Liston caught Clay along the ropes again. Pretty good punch. He had a left arm that was bad for him. This made it unusual. Clay's left arm had been bad for Cassius all night, too.

But in the end, Sunny Liston's bad arm made Cassius Clay the heavyweight champion of the world. So yesterday, with pain trees doing in the sun, right outside the windows, Clay was up on a stage in Convention Hall, quietly answering questions about his future. The big thing in Clay's future is military service. One of his advisers, Bill Faverham, gradually said it wasn't wise to encourage these small two year colleges, where it believed they should be located, and how the two-year colleges can be integrated into the total higher education picture of the state.

At the moment, the state has no policy at all—MIDDLETOWN PRESS.

A Thought for Today
 Sponsored by the Manchester Council of Churches
 President Johnson has declared an "all-out war on human poverty." Senator Goldwater recently remarked that poverty in our country should be "investigated." Why not? It is a laudable aim. Nobody is poor of a certain sort, peace of mind of kind, freedom from debt to a degree, and happiness in retirement to some extent.

The New Testament bears witness as to how very obvious and ever-present was the great contrast between wealth and poverty in Jesus' day. It also bears witness as to how God is above riches. Christ never ceases to say that the love of money could easily be the dominant desire and goal in life.

Jesus is not the only one to claim that men are more valuable than money. Human beings are not to be downgraded on behalf of material things. The Kingdom of God is a brotherhood, not to be sacrificed for any falsehood.

No occupation should be carried on solely from the motive of personal profit, but from the motive of public service. He profits most who serves the most. "Blest are the poor, the pure in spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of God."

Dynamiting The Best

Some of the most important laws of politics were demonstrated in the House of Representatives at Washington last Wednesday.

A fine program can often lack for defenders if it lacks some bright publicity to hand for said defenders to grasp and polish.

The wisest and most beneficial expenditure of money is not always the most popular.

There are, in a democratic legislative body, no votes so ugly and so injurious as those cast in a lighthearted spirit of knowing and caring nothing about the actual issue involved.

All these ugly laws of political behavior were very much in evidence, the other day, as the House voted down, 208 to 118, a bill which would have appropriated $312 million to the International Development Association to help finance that organization's operations for the next three years.

This is an international organization, subsidiary to the World Bank, which the United States itself, in an enlightened and sensible moment, helped create back in 1960.

In its operation, it follows that principle which just about everybody, except politics-conscious Congressmen, considers the ideal principle and formula for foreign aid that does good, real good, on both the receiving and the giving ends.

Individual nations put their contribution into one big international pot. Then the decision as to who gets the help, for what purpose, and the supervision of the use of this help are up to an international authority.

It is, however, hard to sell politicians on such a system. Since it is not going to any designated nation or specific purpose beforehand, the money involved has no political label of any kind on it. Since the particular contribution of any particular nation can't be traced to any particular project or accomplishment, in any particular foreign country, the program offers no easy fodder for political claims back home.

Everybody knows it is the best possible way to provide foreign aid for the nations that need it most, but that, of course, is not enough.

So, the other day, the proposed United States appropriation of $312 million for the International Development Association was subjected to cheap and thoughtless attack in the House, where it was treated as just one more foreign aid bill, and under such attack, failed to generate any very sharp defense for itself, and was killed by 20 votes.

If this vote itself stands, it means that the donations of other nations who have made their contributions to this agency dependent upon our support of it will also cease, and that the agency itself will soon go out of business completely. We were to supply this $312 million, obviously more than our share. Just as our part of almost every other so-good effort internationally is more than our share. But our $312 million was the big nucleus for a fund which the other 18 nations had agreed to build up to a total of $750 million.

This was all to be economic aid, as any truly internationally administered and supervised operation would have to be and none of it military, and it is exactly the kind of channel for American foreign aid effort which ought to be expanded.

They have been rather nicely staged dynamiting. The latest two, yesterday, derailed and jumbled two trains, and closed off both the railroad tracks, and all without doing more than injure one engineer with some flying glass.

As for the amount of damage done, however, that will go into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

What is the dynamiting about, well,

Scranton Kin Killed in Race

HOHART, Tasmania (AP)—The nephew of Gov. William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania was killed today in an auto-racing crash during a practice run.

Tim Mayer of Dalton, Pa., a racing driver, died in an ambulance on the way to Lanesboro General Hospital. Mayer, 28, came to Tasmania to take part in a two-day road race, the program on the Longford Circuit.

Mayer's Cooper Climax went out of control after hitting a bump near Longford Corner, crashed into the back of the road side and turned over.

Mayer was found lying in the center of the road.

The accident occurred during the third trial run. Mayer was in a team with Bruce McLaren of New Zealand.

Longford is about 15 miles from Launceston, Northern Tasmania.

This sport has been indulged in four times in February since the men in Florida, on the tracks of the railroad called the Florida East Coast.

They have been rather nicely staged dynamiting. The latest two, yesterday, derailed and jumbled two trains, and closed off both the railroad tracks, and all without doing more than injure one engineer with some flying glass.

As for the amount of damage done, however, that will go into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

What is the dynamiting about, well,

The State's Policy Lack

Mayor Shea of Meriden has announced he is considering proposing a two-year community college for Meriden because he regards it as a substantial selling point for the city's research and industrial park.

The mayor said that he did not believe that the city could begin such a step until "the economic fortunes of the city are improved, but we can plan for it."

His announcement points up the growing acceptance of the community college in Connecticut. Manchester is a nearby town that has one in operation, but it also underlines the fact that the state has no public policy in regard to such colleges.

It was only in the last session of the Legislature that a law was provided which allowed the formation of such colleges to start such colleges, but there is no operational assistance from the state.

Many states have provided for half the support to come from the town and half from the state. Because the new federal aid to education law specifically provides construction aid to community colleges on a matching basis, it seems more than time for Connecticut to decide whether it wishes to encourage these small two year colleges, where it believes they should be located, and how the two-year colleges can be integrated into the total higher education picture of the state.

At the moment, the state has no policy at all—MIDDLETOWN PRESS.

Martin and Curtis Hold Three-Hour Talk on Budget

The biggest increase in the budget of the school system is in the maintenance of buildings and grounds for next year is in increased costs for instruction and teachers' salaries, said Superintendent William J. Curtis and General Manager Richard Martin. Dr. Curtis reported that the total cost of the 1964-65 operating budget stands at $4.8 million.

In answer to Martin's query, "How are we doing on the maintenance of buildings and grounds?" Curtis stated, "We're keeping abreast pretty well, but not in the best of ways." For example, some playgrounds are being replaced with new ones like Nathan Hale, he said, and getting "stopgap" procedures, surfaces being only and will never be right until we build them all out and put in hard surface paving.
