year, but that doesn't mean everyone will find it easy to get a doctor to come to his home at night to find out what's caus-ing junior's stomach ache. Although the nation's supply of doctors has grown faster than the population explosion since the start of this decade, many rural and small town areas are without a physician. And more and more medical school graduates after years of struggle to become physicians, struggle to become physicians, are going into the selective, higher paying specialties. Opinions differ on whether there is an actual doctor short-age in the United States.

a general practitioner. But Dr. Hugh Hussey, direc-tor of the American Medical As-sociation division of acientific activities and former dean of the Georgetown University Scho of Medicine, Washington, gives a "qualified no" to the question. He said the physician-popula-tion ratio, which measures the number of physician available number of physicians available for each 100,000 persons, is more favorable today than 10 years ago. He said this greater physi-cian supply has been and will be able to meet insreasing de-mands for medical care stemmands for medical care stem-ming from general prosperity and expanded sickness insur-ance programs. But he added that he could not give an unqualified "no" be-cause of his conviction that "we cause of his conviction that "we in practice to relieve the modern physician's problem of ehronic overwork." Norman Davis, director of the program for community medi-cal assistance of the Sears, Roe-buck Foundation, believes many small communities are hard hit by a doctor shortage and he blames the trend toward spe-cialization in medicine. Davis, who specializes in as-sisting small communities to prepare for and attract physi-cians, said the AMA and medi-cine in general have done a good job in boosting the output from the nation's medical schools.

In 1980 there were 80 approved medical schools in the United States. Today there are $7, with 11 additional universities having construction commitments or medical planning schools. Today

Today there are 141.7 physi-eians for every 100,000 persons in the United States and Dr. Hussey said the rise has been constant in recent years. The generally rosy physician supply situation existing today didn't just happen. A jolt came after America entered the space race. Costs of financing a medical education had soared and many top medi-cal prospects in high schools and colleges went into glamor scientific fields requiring fewer years of study. Intensive medical recruitment and financial assistance pro-grams sprang up nationally and in the various states to cope with the problem. The AMA and many constit-ment medical societies offered scholarships and loan funds to medical students. In the last two years, the AMA has made

Steelmakers Meet, Mull Innovations

By SAM DAWSON AP Business News Analyst NEW YORK (AP)-American steelmasters, converging on New York today for their annual meeting, are comparing notes on the fast change-over to new techniques now under way. Some of the smaller companies are claiming credit for leading the move to catch up with steel-

the move to catch up with steel-makers abroad. Beyond that, delegates to the American Iron & Steel Institutes meeting are being told to "an-ticipate major changes in me-tallurgical education and laboratory research" with whole new industries to "emerge out of the new scien-tific developments."

tific developments." The here-and-now The here-and-now changes are coming fast, if belatedly. Continuous casting units are the latest, touted as saving from $2 to $12 a ton by skipping steps in the older process. This trend follows closely on the switch to oxygen furnaces, which can cut $2 to $8 a ton from costs of pro-duction from the standard onen duction from the standard open hearths.

Continuous casting was first used in the European Common Market, Japan and Russia. Re-cently it was taken up here by some small steel companies. And now many of the biggest concerns are building or plan-ning to build continuous casting units. These bypass the ingot mold, stripping, soaking pit, and blooming mill, to convert moltan metal into semifinished steel in one operation. steel in one operation. U.S. Steel will have a unit in operation in about two years at Gary, Ind. National Steel will nave one at Weirton, W.Va., and and Armco Steel at Butler, Pa. Bethlehem's pilot model will Republic furnace soon be in operation. building oxygen which date continuous casting units later. McLouth is experimenting with the process. But some small companies have units already in operation: Roanoke Steel, Robin Steel, Connors Steel division of H. K. Porter.

The reason seems to be that this is one innovation which the small firm, as well as the large, can afford.

"In today's steel industry," says Daniel A. Roblin, president of Roblin Steel Corp., "a new conventional mill must have a capacity of more than one million tons if it expects to operate with continuous casting, companies with markets as little as 50,000 tons can afford the capital equipment required and can produce at a cost that is competitive with big steel." His 140,000-ton plant at Dun-kirk, N.Y., went into three-shift operation last month operation last month.

Along the same line is a pres-sure casting process for stan-less and high alloy steels, which also sidesteps the entire ingot stage, going from ladle to al-most slag-free slab in one step. The process was developed by Griffin Wheel Co., which has li-censed Washington Steel, East-ern Stainless and U.S. Steel to use it. T. S. Fitch, president of Washington Washington, says savings of $75-a-ton can be made in stainess production.

The big change-over in tech-niques in the United States started in the late 1950s. In recent years have come development of new high-grade ore mines, the pelletizing of high-grade ore to reduce transporta-tion costs, improved blast fur-naces to increase pig from ost-put, and the basic oxygen con-verter.

But looking ahead, Dr. Fred-erick Seits, president of the Na-tional Academy of Sciences, is telling the steel men at the in-stitute meeting that they are only on the threshold of new techniques now being tested or sought. ought.

e hope this page never got so ponal about his imperfections and inencies that it denied to Prime ister Nehru credit for coming much eloser than other world leaders of his time to faithfulness to principle.

The key principle to which he pledged imself, and which he tried to give control over his own acts and policies was

The end does not justify the means. Or, to twist it, for statement from nother angle:

One cannot expect good results from will methods.

The moment one states such principlas in connection with Nehru, one begins to think of the instances in which a himself, either through his own human weaknesses, or because of the presure of politics, seemed to violate his wa code. His resort to force to hold Kashmir, or to take Goa, are the specacular examples. But he made many other compromises.

Add all his violations and compronises together, however, and then subract the effect of them from the total affect of his living in the world, and one till comes out plus. Nehru still came ut, in the main, as an influence for avilization, and as a prophet, often loner, often abused, but sometimes, again, stucially effective, for the dispassionate cement of an international law to rotect the peace and repulse aggres-

Thus, for example, it was his approval which gave great moral sanction to the very first United Nations police-style ection, in Kores. And, in each world erisis since, it has been invaluable to the United Nations and to the cause of building a world peace through law that the India of Nehru was always available, ready to take the lead in providing manpower for peace police duty, and able to do so without provoking the suspicion or enmity of others.

It is difficult to imagine a more dramatic career in our times than that of this man who divided his mature life almost equally between political prison and rule of a new great nation struggiing to be a democracy. No doubt this drama added to the stature and appeal he had for the people of his own country, and for those of the outside world. Beyond the biographical record, however, there was something else built into his life and being. It was something of a spiritual nature. It was his own great strength, that there was, inside aim, this great intangible essence. It was the thing that brought the great crowds of his country into a feeling of almost spiritual identification with him and his purposes.

Perhaps, in some ways, this Nehru intangible was something oriental, rising out of philosophies and traditions we of the West do not understand or appreciate easily. Perhaps, in other ways, it was something quite as elemental and natural and yet intangible as the simple healing goodness which this nation has so often found in the presence of Dwight D. Eisenhower. The analysis and appresiation of Nehru can find many approaches and many entrances.

The simplest thing to say is that if has been an experience and a privilege to be alive in the same world with Nehru, in an era of great events, great decisions, and great shapings of destiny or the whole world. It has also been an era of great chieftains, great leaders, great wielders of power. Nehru, as the disciple of Gandhi, and as the individaal who tried to struggle with the pracicalities of the Gandhi legacy, was perhaps the mildest of all these large figures in an historic spoch, and still conosivably the greatest.

When Honest Answers Begin

The fact that the results in the Oreon Republican primary on May 15 showed Governor Rockefeller the winner instead of Ambassador Lodge has rerived criticism and distrust of the polling method. But there can't be too much erious quarrel, really, with the performance of either the polls or the voters in The polls were on the right track, since they did have Rockefeller coming p fast behind Lodge, the early leader. And, in any case, it's a healthy thing to have the voters crossing up the polls a little now and then, just so polls themselves, and the people, and the voters, won't ever be able to think that the polls are the whole show and the things that count.

But the way the polls, in Oregon, were racing to catch up with what might be described as the "real" voting intention of the good Republicans of that state provides an interesting sample of what we consider the one built-in weakness of the polls.

The polls have not yet devised any sixth sense delicate enough and shrewd enough to tell when the person being inrviewed is giving an answer which is in itself experimental or exploratory in nature. The polls offer us all, if we are even approached by one, a most luxurious opportunity to try out one kind of answer, to see how it sounds to ourselves when we give it, to test how our own blood reacts to it, or even to discharge, with that one straw vote, a nagging sense of obligation to do something for one particular candidate or another.

The polls never really know when they are getting the final, clutch answer. Frequently, the people being polled themselves do not know what their own final decision will be. Sometimes it is only after they have answered a poll question one way that they themselves realize they are never, never going to answer that same question the same way inside the sacred, binding privacy of a voting booth.

For many months past, it seems to us, most of the polling being done has been of a very "iffy" character, both as it has pitted Republican presidential candidates against one another and then as it has pitted them against President Johnson. People being polled have been giving answers in the luxury class-where they could be whimsical, sentimental, experimental, and never necessarily bind hemselves to anything. Out in Oregon, people suddenly began to be afraid that this polling game was leading them and their party and their country into something that might prove serious and binding after all. So. while the polls necessarily lagged behind them, they began shifting their mood and their direction, and began answering the very next poll they faced, which took the shape of an official party primary, as if it were a serious and binding affair. At the very end, all the polls were getting honest answers. What the polls still can't tell is just when the people being polled are going to stop their perhaps quite unconscious play in which they give tentative answers and turn to that complete seriousness in which they produce their final

You May Have Noticed It

There is nothing more comforting than to have some personal observation, confirmed by some high authority. This is particularly precious when he personal observation involved happens to be something you hardly dare believe even yourself, let alone communicate it to somebody else.

Suppose, for instance, the last time you journeyed down to the Atlantic and stepped into its waters and then looked over toward Spain it seemed to you that the Atlantic Ocean was wider than it used to be. Or supposed, flying over it, you had the same disconcerting impres-

You would hardly dare tell yourself or anybody else, that Europe and America are getting farther apart. Then along come reports of a meeting of the Royal Society in London which heard evidence, sanctified by computer processes, that the Atlantic Ocean is indeed widening by a few inches every

So you weren't just imagining things after all! You weren't just seeing things! Europe and America are farther apart than they used to be! And you are sane!

Those British computers are not only working on the way the various continents of the world may be moving. They are also, looking to the past, compiling precise evidence which indicates how very closely united some of the present continents may have been in the past. They have been doing this by making precise and detailed calculations as to how the lines of various continents would fit into one another. They have accomplished the matching of the western shore line of Africa with the eastern shore line of South America so precisely as to suggest that once the two masses were indeed one mass, and they are working, at present, on the business of fitting Australia into Antartica. If the computers make out well enough with this problem, they will start twisting and turning other continents around to see if there is any way they can fit one another reasonably, into one world. Meanwhile, however, the same computers strengthen the theory that the continents are still drifting apart. It will be nice to know where they all started from, but the drift will be the thing to watch. You may notice it yourself, on your next trip to Nauset.

The second secon Dirt-Cheap Parkway Safety

The State Highway Department is erecting metal barriers along some sec-tions of the Merritt Parkway to prevent cars crossing the median strip and col-liding with vehicles traveling in the opposite direction. It will be several years before these guards are in place from the Housatonic River to the New York State line at Greenwich. In recent days clean fill has been dumped in a section of the divider in the Fairfield area. The fill is graded to about four feet high and the sides heap, substitute. -NEW HAVEN

Law Cleans London Air, Birds Return

By JOHN GALE LONDON (AF) — The liquid notes of the dawn chorus are filling the London air once more. It is an almost forgotten music which is giving the Lon-doner a new spring in his stride and turning the open spaces of the capital into chattering aviaries. Birds have not been in such abundance since amoke and abundance since smoke and smog drove them from the crowded city to surburban gar-dens and wooded hillstdes. They are returning in increasing numbers with strict enforce-numbers with strict enforce-ment of antipolition legisla-tion which now constitutes al-most the whole of greater London as a clean-air zone. The evacuation had made London almost barren of bird-song. Only a few hardy strag-glers hung on — the grimy, perky sparrows and the pigeons begging for crumbs in Trafal-gar Skuare, the starlings clus-tering along the rooftops of Whitehall, and the exotic Man-darin ducks and red-created darin ducks and red-created pochards imported to St. James's Park. Other visitors

But a report on bird life in the royal parks just published by a government committee says the whole picture has changed. There are 800 acres of royal parks in the center of the capital and the cuckoo - once capital and the cuckoo — once lost to London—has been sight-ed in all of them. Also sighted have been kittl-wake gulls and puffins up from coastal regions, the spotted fly-catcher, the garden warbler, waxwings and crossbills. Even the great spotted wood-pecker has alighted on the roy-al acres where the committee said 134 different species of birds have been identified in the last couple of years. ast couple of years. The balance sheet also shows

Once there was a heronry in Richmond Park where Prin-cess Alexandra, a cousin of Queen Elizabeth II, lives with Queen Elizabeth II, nyes with her husband, Angus Ogilvy, Herons started nesting there 80 years ago. In 1934, 48 pairs were identified in the park. Now there are none — the last bird husing 166 in 1965 bird having left in 1961. # HIT HEALTH CLAIMS

WASHINGTON (AP) -WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Adminis-tration warned today that it will take legal action unless producers drop what the agency called misbranding of vegetable oil products with "claims that they are 'poly-unsaturated' and thus sup-posedly effective in treating or preventing heart or artory disease." George P. Larrick, FDA commissioner, made the announcement at a meeting of FDA's Public Service Com-mittee, composed of repreof FDA's Public Service Com-mittee, composed of repre-sentatives of national consum-er organizations. Larrick said the decision to proceed against health claims being made for vegetable oil prod-ucts was based on the results of a consumer survey of pub-lic understanding of current labeling of such products.
