He Respects The Office He Held e expresses himself on the question of the national attitude toward the war in Vietnam, is obviously anguished and disturbed by two reverences which are companion to one another.

One is his love of his own country, not quite in that super-patriotic sense which says "my country right or wrong" but love of country which is sufficient to give his own country the benefit of the doubt in controversy and keep him, even if he may think his country wrong, from giving any comfort to the enemies it may have, even if they are the wrong enemies in the wrong place.

Former President Eisenhower's love of his country is not, in this respect, vastly different from that of any other general, educated and trained in the military service of his country. And the national scene has other generals who have the same basic pattern of love for their country who do not approve of what their country is doing in Vietnam, and who say so openly.

There is another factor in Mr. Eisenhower's outlook which moves his love of country and his patriotism up a notch beyond that of the ordinary good American. He is deeply concerned with preserving respect for the office he himself once held, that of President of this great

It obviously sickens him in his heart to have any occupant of the office of . nt subjected to widespread public abuse, or denied automatic support in instances where he has put the flag of the country out on the line in position of battle and danger. He would feel this way, we think, no matter what he hapened to feel about the particular individual in the White House, whether he actually regarded his leadership as deplorable, or his war decisions unwise.

These are the powerful instincts inside Mr. Eisenhower as he, the one-time epitome of tolerance and understanding comes close to name-calling in his discussion of those who take the softer, dove-like side of the national debate on No one can withhold from Mr. Eisennower the respect he holds for the of tice he himself once held. But no one should be called upon, either, to abandon respect for the kind of decisions Mr. Eisenhower himself made when he had that office. He had then an opportunity to be a hawk on Vietnam, and turned down those advisers who counseled him in that direction. He had then an opportunity to express himself on the subject of all and any war and what he had to say then was that war, not peace, was the thing that had become the impossibility. Dwight Eisenhower had then the opportunity, many times over, to choose between a policy which regarded the Communist world as a monolith which existed only to destroy us and a policy which emphasized the necessity for co-He now lends his fervent backing to decisions and policies he himself would not ever have made, judging by his own actual record. He even looses scorn and contempt on positions which are much closer to positions he himself took in office than they are to the positions of the present President. But he has a right to be understood in the positions he takes, and a right to respect for the emotions which lead him toward such positions. He deserves that understanding and respect even from those who cannot follow him all the way with LBJ.

There is a character in Pittsburgh which seems quite a center for such lavishness, who buys it suits a year from the most exclusive tailors of the city, whose prices start at $300 a suit. After the Pittsburgh tailors have sold you a $300 suit (after proper introduction of course) they will recommend a place in New York where you can get shoes to match for $145 a pair. If you live in Pittsburgh, the place to buy your gun for hunting is from a firm in England which charges $2,500 a hand-crafted weapon. There's a millionaire in Chicago who really has a solid gold Cadiliac. We don't know whether, in doing all this research, the Wall Street Journal was trying to inspire us all to revolution. But there will be a good many of us, we suspect, who will have trouble making our jealousies and envies rise anywhere near a boiling point. We have seen too much ordinary down to earth black and white television not to know that all these great spenders are really trying desperately to compensate for some sense of insecurity. We know they must be terribly unhappy to be driven to such abnormalities of spending. We know that any one of them would swap it all in, in a twinkling, for one single moment of honest, humble, affection-shared poverty. If there's one thing we have all learned, in the age of our own affluence up to the point of being able to have the soap opera come into our own homes, it is to pity the poor rich people.

So what if the free car rides nice, the expensive suit fits well, the $145 shoe doesn't pinch, the free lunch tastes good, and it seems convenient to have six houses and an apartment to escape into now and then? Such things may be all very well in their place, but they're not

When George Romney withdrew from nomination last month, an observer was quoted as saying: "Nixon never even had to lay a glove on him." Richard Nixon's comment was: "Now, it's a new ball game." When Robert F. Kennedy recently declared himself a contender for the Democratic nomination, Governor Rockefeller said: "the ball's loose on the field." Senator Eugene McCarthy said last week that Kennedy "plays touch football, I play tackle. He plays softball, I play baseball. He skates in Rockefeller Center, I play hockey. And last year, as if foreseeing this kind of talk, President Johnson said: "If decide to run, I'll win and I'll be here

According to most poorly regarded political sources, this year's campaigns are going to be the most hotly contested races since 1951 and 1962, when the Giants nipped the Dodgers in runoffs. The campaigns will be heightened, it is said. by the use of sports metaphors to give citizen-fans a greater sense of involvement and to obscure real meanings. An ment by Senator Thruston B. There is no percentage in charging that a man is soft on Communism when you say, with a grin, "He goes to his left pretty good." Why charge an opponent with ducking the big issues when you can say, especially in hockey expansion cities, "you can't ice the puck forever in this league." After an opponent has made a nasty attack, a politician ould say, "His backhand is pretty good, but he can't keep his serve on the court." In other socio-economic areas, it might be better to say, "His spin is pretty good, but he can't keep his de-

As political sports talk proliferates contenders will have to let rookies "field the hot ones" while they, more sophisticated, "try not to get burned in the secondary." It will no longer do to "have my innings" when "there's another chukker to go." Any state Assembly hopeful can talk about "a team effort, we're all feeding the center," but Man Who is the man who says, 'One rower pulls a crab and the shell goes down." The greenest Congressional candidate can try not "to fumble the baton" but it takes a Most Valuable Player "to rate his horse in the stretch." The course is laid with traps and hazards, naturally. Is President Johnson "goalending?" Are you afraid Governor Reagan will throw "a blind side tackle?" Will McCarthy, at fourth down, punt?" Is there a chance Romney will climb back into the ring? What about Hubert Humphrey, will he be a penalty killer all his life? The fronton will be fraught with political sports talk until the final moment of play when the one with the most heart and desire, the Best Man, learns that it doesn't matter how he covered his position as long as he got it up on the scoreboard. Blast Rocks Draft Center

In Manhattan

NEW YORK (AP) -A power ful bomb blast rocked the armed forces induction center in lower Manhattan early today, shattering some 30 windows in the nine-story building. There were no reports of injuries. The bomb, placed at the rear of the 81-year-old building, exploded at about 1:20 a.m. with a plast that was heard up to a mile away, police said. Windows
