Votes, Words, Deeds Senator Eugene McCarthy in Wisonsin on Tuesday soundly and decisively defeated the President of his party and his country in a contest national convention delegates. This is, of course, one of the most unusual developments in the history of American politics, and a measure o the unprecedented depth of the national division President Johnson was recognizing in his own crucial decision Sunday said to have affected and shaded this Wisconsin result in two ways, First, it blunted and softened the shock of such a repudiation of the President, because it got into the situation, just before the voting, the President's declaration that he was not a candidate after all. This, assuredly, was one of the reasons for the timing which brought the President to the microphone and camera on this particular Sunday in March.

Second, it would be our guess that he President's Sunday night announcement also influenced, to some degree, the course of the voting in Wisconsin nesday. The President had suddenly reempted and occupied, Sunday night, he peace issue which had been Senator McCarthy's original single reason for entering the primary. It was not until during the day of the voting, Tuesday, that the actual small dimensions of th President's bombing halt began to take something away from his Sunday night appearance in the role of a leader who had turned to de-escalation. The President's Sunday night speech and decision not only seemed to preempt the peace issue for the President tself, but the speech, certainly the greatest and most powerful this man and ever delivered, and his great personal decision, had the effect of creating an instant restoration of his prestige popularity, and leadership power. The truth is that, for Sunday night at least, Lyndon Johnson looked much more like a national leader than any of those actually in the field for that honor this

We would guess, then, that the President ran better in Wisconsin, because of his Sunday night performance and decision, than he would have run other-

Despite all the President's last minute mastery, however, Senator McCarthy still gained his own decisive triumph in the Wisconsin voting.

If the vote in the actuality is to have the same importance for the man in the White House it had before it was actually recorded, it still constitutes a mandate toward responsible, but sincere, efforts to move toward peace in Viet-

The President himself took what seemed an impressive and winging start toward that objective Sunday night. But by the time the next day's bombing had been reported, it was obvious that, once again, he had managed to seem more peaceful in his words than he was being in his actual military orders. It is to be hoped that he himself recognizes the importance of this, and alters h's commands to make the bombing halt as impressive in actuality as it was in president's withdrawal should Meanwhile, however, the quick disappearance of the kind of bombing halt everybody assumed the President had announced illustrates how foolish it would have been for Senator McCarthy himself, or the voters of Wisconsin, to relax their position and abandon their pressure as a result of what had happened Sunday night. If they believe in the point they are trying to make, they need to keep on making it. If they have played a role in persuading the President to announce his own shift from escalation to de-escalation, they need to stay on watch to see precisely what action follows such words.

All anyone could possibly ask would be that the President hew to the spirit and the purposes of his Sunday night address, not merely for 24 hours, or 48 hours, but for the weeks and months it may take to de-fuse this war to the point where its tragedy can be halted, and its issues be taken to the inconclusive evasions of a negotiating table rather than left to the inconclusive

"Orienteering" is, from the descripion we have of it, especially suited for the British and their ideas of what might e good casual fun for friends or family. As for the time when Americans might think it fun, of a weekend or holiday afternoon, that, we think, is still a half century or so off. We have some maturing to do, we people of the new and noisier world, before we slow down enough to get real enjoyment out of

One plays orienteering much as one plays the game of an automobile rally, except that one proceeds on foot, and through countryside rather than over roads. The players assemble at a given point on a given afternoon, and are nanded maps outlining the terrain for the game. On these maps are a number of points they must reach and visit before they take themselves to the final rendezvous. At each of these spots, there will be found hanging a stamp which they will use to certify their having been

The players who touch all the required spots and reach the final rendezvous first are the winners. Usually, they are the athletic type and play wearing track suits. But the family type player considers it quite a triumph if he merely finishes the course at all, he and his wife and the young ones, and he wears his old tramping clothes and doesn't worry too much about time and order

But the race is not always, for that matter, to the swift. As the name of the game implies, the main skill involved is that of being able to use a map efficiently in finding one's way around and through a landscape, and the long distance runner without a good sense of direction might end 'up covering five times as much distance as anybody else

As to when we Americans might be ready for such a game, that is a matter of speculation. We have, so far, progressed to the point where we are willing to travel almost any distance to put ourselves behind some kind of sporting motor, the golf cart, the snowmobile, the outboard, the cycle, but we have not yet reached the point of being willing to travel very far in order to divest ourselves of all powers of movement except those of our own legs.

The British have been friendly and family walkers, which would be good basic preparation for the more formal sport of orienteering, for generations, We Americans have still before us the discovery that walking can be a privilege and a pleasure rather than a hardship. When that day comes, we will have to begin looking around us to see if we have any good orienteering terrain within reach of a two or three hour double bombshell with world and domes tic reverberations Sunday night when h announced he will not seek and will not accept the renomination of his party. This leaves the president a lame duck -but it also leaves him free to act as resident for what he believes to be in the best interests of the United States without concern for his own political future. It seems significant that he had just said he would, so long as he is president, place his duty to his office and country first, before his party, as pres ident of all the people. As a lame duck the political animus of which he had been made the target will be dissipated and may leave him in a position of stronger leadership than before. His course can no longer be imputed to personal ambi a divided country. The president had just announced that he would order a cessation of bombing of North Vietnam except in the area just has the military purpose of supporting north of the demilitarized zone where it U.S. troops in the north of South Vietnam. Coupled with what followed it puts the question directly to Hanoi and Mos-

The enemy's response may be the same as it was in the preceding 35 bombing halts. If it is Hanoi itself will have drained of credibility the enormous propagenda that this would bring de-escalation and the peace table. If it is not, it could de-escalate the war. It is Ho Chi Minh and his pals i

Moscow, who are now to be hoist by their own petard if the reaction to this unilateral de-escalation move by the United States is taken in bad faith. If Hanoi's response is negative, on the domestic scene it will certainly undercut the positions taken by U.S. Senators Robert Kennedy and Eugene McCarthy as candidates for the Democratic presiential nomination.

bring a new atmosphere to Congress, to which he has passed the challenge of budget control for which it has clamored, and the challenge of action toward relucing our balance of payment budget. Knowing the president's political makeup, it is fair to say he made a personal sacrifice in coming to the decision he arrived at. How the nation and leader of various elements in the nation will react to the challenge implicit in his decision one cannot be sure, but he has certainly challenged all Americans to a greater sense of responsibility for the good of the country. They cannot ignore t. If, as president of all the people, free of the suspicion of personal ambition, he does what he believes best for the nation, he may draw the American people into a sense of unity in the coming Mr. Johnson's withdrawal may also affect the Republican presidential race. It will be odd indeed if the "moderate" Republicans do not renew their effort to put a candidate in the field in which ichard E. Nixon now stands alone. On the Democratic side it has changed the political picture immeasurably. ANSONIA EVENING SENTINEL
