London Ships Idled Again By Strike

LONDON AP) - Thousands about the North Vietnamese of London dock workers struck again today for another march on Parliament to protest colored immigrants in Britain.

The strikers shouled down a Roman Catholic priest and Protestant clergymen who were introduced by a Communist union leader in an attempt to persuade them back to work Scores of ships in the teeming port were left idle by the 24 hour walkout. At Tilbury, the port's deep-water section handling liners for the Far East and Australia only 65 of the usual 2,000 men reported for work. All work stopped on 12 liners. Up river at the Royal Group a meeting of 2,000 longshoremen howled down leftist opponents of the walkout who led last year's four-month dock strike, from which the port is only now recovering.

Only three men voted agains the strike resolution, which affirmed the dockers' support fo the inflammatory speech by Enoch Powell demanding a ban or colored immigration. Powell's speech earned him immediate dismissal from the inner councils of the conservative party and a surge of support from workers who fear the competition of colored immigrants from the West Indies, Africa and Asia. The strikers took to Parlia ment a petition signed by 3,000 dockers and merchant seamen demanding an immediate immigration ban and protesting the government's antidiscrimina ion bill now before Parliament The bill, which was approved in principle by the house of commons Tuesday, extends to nousing and employment a previous act's bar on discrimination in such public places as theaters and restaurants. Maybe Khesanh Never Was? The story of Khesanh may be, in miniature, the story of our whole Vietnam involvement.

It is the latest determination about Khesanh which gives sharp point to the First, of course, American forces decided to go forward toward Khesanh, to set up a sort of frontier fortress and watch-post there. Second, in an effort to show power and determination, we decided to concentrate here a force much heavier than any we needed to garrison a frontier watchtower.

Third, once we had established there a force too large for its natural or logical military importance, we made Khesanh itself more important than it othervise would have been.

Fourth, our move forward in such force attracted, as such moves usually do, an answering concentration from the enemy. Suddenly the enemy, too, began giving Khesanh an importance it did not really deserve.

Fifth, the military situation developed nto one of protracted preparation for siege, on the part of the enemy, and semi-desperate defense, by our Marines, of an over-sized outpost which had become semi-isolated Sixth, it now became recognized that we couldn't retire from Khesanh even if we wanted to, no matter what kind of trap it might prove to be for us. We had to fight there, to the death, because we were there, and because the combined maneuvers of both ourselves and the enemies had made this a showdown.

Seventh, for murky reasons and by novements no one has yet described very clearly, the showdown was dissolved, by movement without words. The enemy besiegers and our own reief columns seemed to recede and advance as if in some unison, and soon our Marines were free to leave the hill of Eighth, it now develops that Khesanh, the site of the great showdown, the focal point of so many anxious days of the war, is going to be treated, from now on, as if it were almost nothing. We will keep a light token force there, truly an outpost watch force and nothing more, and we have no intention of labeling Khesanh, again, as a particular piece of terrain it is vital we fight for to the death. In fact, it doesn't seem to make much difference, in our present military mood, who is there, or whether anybody is there.

Such the origin, evolution, and demise of Khesanh as the small vital piece of Southeast Asia we had to hold if our national honor and our national vital interest were to be defended. Khesanh was what it was when and while we made it so; when the flux of events and attitudes mix into something different, it becomes almost possible to say that Khesanh never was. It may be that, some day, it will seem that Vietnam never was, either.

The Dangers Of Over-Praise

The pity of the statement former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara has filmed about the performances of Senator Robert Kenendy during the administration of his late brother is that the statement ends up enhancing nobody's reputation. The fulsome, flattering picture of Bobby Kennedy actually making the master behind the scenes strokes in the Cuban missile crisis, and the adulttory description of his maryelous motives and reasonings in crisis are so extreme as to suggest that they never came naturally from the rather tight pen normally wielded by Mr. McNamara. The things he said make him look a little ridiculous for saying them, and they actually deflate the object of his praise by making him seem too much too good to be true. Read, for illustration, a portion of the McNamara hymn of glorification: "And he also opposed a massive surprise attack by a large country on a mall country because he believed that such an attack was inhuman, was contrary to the traditions and ideals of our country, an act of brutality for which the world would never forgive us. "He (Robert, not John Kennedy) un derstood then as now that, above all else, a United States President must while defending our vital interests, prevent the confrontation between nuclear powers which can lead to nuclear holocaust. His (Robert's) objective was to force the missiles out of Cuba without war, and that objective was accomplished.

"It was accomplished by a strategy which he helped to shape and his brother directed. . .He (Bobby) showed a shrewd sense of diplomacy: . . . Throughout the entire period of the crisis, a period of the most intense strain I have ever operated under, he remained calm and cool, firm but restrained, never nettled and never rattled.

"And he demonstrated then, as I have seen him do on so many occasions both before and since, a most extraordinary combination of energy and courage, compassion and wisdom."

The worst thing suggested by the public release of this spate of over-praise is that the subject of it all may have pubread or heard it and actually have thought it good for his cause to have it publicized.

By Nightfall, Please

This is Arbor Day, and if there is any grace in the weather there will be a token shower at the end of the day, to put its blessing upon whatever woniers the hand of man may have attempted to work during the day.

Never is man more grateful and humble, never is his innocence more unsullied and appealing, than is his state while he is in the act of planting the tree which, if he plants well and with the full endorsement of nature, is almost certain to live far beyond himself. Who makes a tree, he knows full well. But what a lot of glorious sovereignty and privilege that leaves to the human being who plants one, of the type he pleases, where he pleases! It is a sensation to experience when very young, and to feel growing richer with each passing year, even until one gets to the stage of planting shade one will never sit in.

But to all the charm and mystique of the proper Arbor Day, there is one most essential addition-a proper and receptive moistness of the soil. To nourish this day's plantings, one more April shower, please, by nightfall.

To Shoot Or Not To Shoot

Now comes the inevitable debate about actics employed by police in the latest wave of urban rioting. The debate can be useful, but only if some importan distinctions are made.

First, the discussion should steer clear of the oversimplified hawk-and-dove stereotypes that have fogged so many other arguments over current hat issues. No one is seriously arguing that looters and arsonists go unpunished. Nor is anyone seriously contending that property holds a higher place in the scheme of values than human life, or that women and children should be gunned down n the streets. Those who want police authorized to fire on looters and arsonists base their argument on the need for appropriate force to curtail lawlessness and keep rioting in check. Next, it should be noted that so far the most outspoken critics of police operations in the recent disorders have no been the experts on law enforcement The critics have been politicians, such as Chicago's Mayor Richard J. Daley and Louisiana's Sen, Russell B. Long. This criticism is understandable. Good colliticians are naturally sensitive to the feelings of their people, and people reacted with horror and frustration at the sight of their police seemingly standing idle while buildings burned and stores were picked clean of merchandise, Don't the people have a right to expect their police to protect their property? And sn't an arsonist, as Mayor Daley correctly observed, a potential murderer Once again, the issue is not whether the law should be enforced, or whether property and life should be protected The issue turns on the best way to do it. And here is where the experts -- the professional police and military men: 1 ho have been learning some hard lessons about riot control -should be listened to The biggest lesson these men have learned grows from the sad experiences of Watts, Newark, Detroit, and elsewhere in recent years: Riotbrand lawlessness simply cannot be met in the same fashion as individual incidents of lawlessness. It has become apparent that especially in the early hours of major racial disorders, police cannot mobilize fast enough or act with reasonable safety to halt lawlessness. Conditions, in short, are like the conditions of war, and must be met more with military tactics than with conventional police methods. This is a brutal fact, and one the country has been slow in accepting. But the experts seem to have accepted it. This has led to a strategy of quick deployment of military units -Federal and National Guard troops -- and restraint by police. Firing upon rioters, except in self-defense or to protect the lives of others, has been ruled out. The results need further evaluation but it appears this strategy succeeded easonably well in the disorders earlier this month. We say reasonably well, because the aftermath has produced the kind of public reaction typified by Mayor' Daley's rebuke to Chicago police, and by a wave of gun-buying in some netropolitan areas. So one big task ahead is education. The people need to be educated about he problems police and soldiers face in attempting to halt rioting. The people need to be educated, also, about how much greater will be the cost in lives and property if their law enforcers don't exercise restraint. So far the debate has produced more confusion than education. It would be disastrous if this confusion were allowed to cancel out the real progress that has been made in dealing with urban rioting. THE NATIONAL OBSERVER

In Connecticut generally, and in Manchester in particular, the system of staggered terms has worked well through the years. OUR CHILDREN ARE BEING DENIED!!

POOR SCIENCE FACILITIES!

The children of Manchester are being denied TOTAL instruction in all areas of education. Many are not receiving remedial reading or speech help so desperately needed for success in life. Social workers and guidance personnel are not being supplied in adequate quantities. Students cannot do their best job without the necessary facilities to prepare them for college, a job, or merely living comfortably with others more fortunate.

Teachers are overburdened due to the lack of secretarial aides and special services in preparing instructional materials for our children. Manchester exists in the past, using the old tools which have become unreliable. Physical facilities are inadequate in many schools: Roofs leak, toilet facilities are notoriously obsolete, ventilation is miserable, etc.

No one is looking for plush settings, but our boys and girls MUST have adequate staffing to draw from and equipment and materials to learn with. The Manchester Education Association, which sponsored this ad from its own funds, feels the Manchester Board of Education has been REMISS in not making the problems of the school system known to the community and by permitting these problems to continue. THE COMMUNTY MUST be made aware of the deteriorating conditions its children and staff are burdened with. This Ad Sponsored by: Manchester Education Association

LEAKY ROOFS!

WE THE PEOPLE must act now by demanding that an additional $319,000 be restored to the Educational Budget for 1968-69. This is the amount the General Manager has recommended cut from an already mini-mal budget. CALL THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS_LET THEM KNOW HOW YOU FEEL!

MANCHESTER OWNERS and ALL TAXPAYERS!

Question No. 2

Shall the town expend $1,110,670 as its share of the construction of a secondary sewer treatment plant and the sewers pertaining thereto?

The Property Owners Association was the first organization in Manchester to approve of this expenditure.

WE RECOMMEND A YES VOTE ON THIS QUESTION!

Failure to vote yes on this question, will necessitate the expenditure of a larger sum at a later date!

Additional Information On Question No. 1:--

There are 81 expenditures in this question, many which are non-essential.

Many belong in a pay as you go catagory, instead of this bonding program.

Many of these expenditures would never be approved on their merits singly, but by lumping them all together in one million dollar borrowing package, they hope that the necessary items will carry the non-essential expenditures.

If the property owners expect to hold taxes down-THEY SHOULD VOTE NO! Necssary improvements can be authorized later...
