A Court For The Times

- It is no diminution of the importance of Chief Justice Earl Warren as an individual, even though it may pose rebuke to those who have thought they could solve this country's ills by impeaching him, to guess that the so-called "Warren Court" would have performed its essential of controversial services for the country and the time even if no such particular individual as Earl Warren

These have been 15 years of inevitable awakening toward change in the Ameri-

tion of some of our own historic promises

Some may argue that this need not have been so if the Court hadn't led the way and stirred things up by some of its own revolutionary decisions.

And perhaps there is no firm, conclusive answer to the question of which came first - the spreading thirst of American minorities of many descripfrom the Court, of rulings confirming

Perhaps it will be said, in future appraisals, that Chief Justice Warren, in his personal convictions, in his imperurbability, gave the necessity of the

But this —young people can't do that. I don't blame them in a way for being in revolt because I don't see where most of them will fit.

Now what are you going to do with iterary intellectual in a computerized society? He don't belong there. No place for him. He can sit on the side and have deas, but they're no good for anything They don't operate, nobody reads him e's in a bad way. .Now this revolt of youth is not a phenomenon of the United States, as you know. It's all over the world, and it's an over-mechanized world which is leaving out too many people, giving them no room to live any kind of an expressive life. I think the civilization is going to produce a lot of sick people, people who have no place in it. What you going to do? We're trying to find jobs for everybody. Well, there aren't enough, and the more people you get, the less there's going to be proportionately. So I don't know what's to come. That sounds pessimistic, don't it? MANCHESTER, CONN., WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1968

Fortas Chief Justice,

Ready last month-

When you flip an electric switch in your home or place of business, some of the electricity will come from this highly efficient new plant. It's the new 333,000-kilowatt Merrimack Station at Bow, New Hampshire. This is the latest of the 11 new generating plants that will assure power-aplenty for all six New England states.

Ready next month-

The Canal Electric Company at Sandwich, Massachusetts, on Cape Cod Canal, will add another 560,000 kilowatts to the interconnected network that has given New England one of the most modern electric systems in the world. This is the fourth of the Big 11 plants to be completed. Seven more, using the most advanced technology, will go "on the line" by 1972. And more are planned beyond that.

sure power-a-plenty-for electric heat, and for total electric living, both now and in the future. The 500-foot-high stack will be a major contribution

Ready by mid-summer-

I hree more new plants join New England's power plant parade. (11)

Connecticut's new Bridgeport Harbor Station No. 3 will generate 400,000 kilowatts of electricity for homes all over New England. This will help as-

The Big Eleven Plus: 11 new plants operating by 1972, plus more to come year after year.

Three more highly efficient new generating plants are joining the parade of new facilities that are giving New England one of the most modern electric systems in the world.

A new plant at Bow, New Hampshire, is already feeding low-cost energy into the interconnected system serving all six states.

Another new generating station on Cape Cod Canal will go into operation next month.

Still another new generating station at Bridgeport Harbor, Connecticut, will go "on the line" by mid-

These plants are the latest additions to the Big 11 Plus construction program being carried out by the Electric Companies of New England They join a new plant at Boston and a nuclear station at Haddam Neck, Connecticut, as our coordinated area-wide system grows every year.

Here's what this means to you. As the tempo of New England's growth increases, it will mean plenty of reliable power for all six New England states. It will also mean greater efficiency so that, as you use more and more, electricity will be a bigger bargain than ever. That's why thousands of modern-minded New Englanders are switching to practical electric heat and the unbeatable advantages of total electric living.
