He Names It; We Have It Even while he dismissed "semantics" s an "inappropriate approach," President Nixon was, in his initial press conberence, Ulustrating the extreme imhortance involved in a selection of one from among several words.

He was answering a question as what our goal should be in the field of nuclear weapons, and he was choosing among three words-"parky", "supersority" and "sufficiency"-for a word to represent the goal of his new adminis-

"Let me put it this way," said the President. "When we talk about parity, think we should recognize that wars occur, usually, when each side believes it has a chance to win. Therefore, parity does not necessarily assure that a war

"By the same token, when we talk about superiority, that may have a detrimental effect on the other side, in putting it in an inferior position, and therefore giving great impetus to its own arms race. Our objective in this Admintration—and this is a matter we're going to discuss at the Pentagon this aftermoon, and it will be a subject of a major discussion in the National Security Council within a month-our objective is to be sure the United States has sufficient military power to defend our interests and to maintain the commitments which this Administration determines are in the interests of the United around the world. I think sufficiency is a better term, actually, than either superiority or parity." We agree with the Presidents' assess ment of the term, not only as a sort of semantic quietus upon domestic elements and are accused of living in the Middle who really think there is no degree of superiority which would really be sufficient for us, but as a better word for us to be carrying in front of us as we appear in our big power posture in the Interestingly enough, only a few days after President Nixon selected "sufficiency" as our goal, an expert study appeared to assure us and him that we Imperfections there are. But these imperfections are going to be cured, says DuBridge, "not by wrecking but by improving the structure which carries the torch of learning, the torch of civilizatime, the United States and the Soviet tion, on to future generations."

"The foundations of society in each country would certainly be destroyed." This sounds to us as if we had our share of the sufficiency President Nixon was naming to be our goal.

And we hope it leads, with his administration, to an abandonment of the campaign-promised effort to close some kind of nuclear "gap" or another which It may be that they regret sending in is just as speedy an abandonment as that the Kennedy administration made eight years ago, when, after campaigning against a missile gap, it took office and made a factual audit and discovered there was no such thing.

Act Nobody Wants To Defend Whoever is running the show in Iraq these days has come in for some distilusionment. They hoped, obviously, to become heroes to the Arab world with their action of excess brutality, in the mass hanging of 14 people accused of having spied for Israel. But, in actuality, their action seemed not only to enrage Israel as they expec ed, and to draw the condemnation of much of the outside world, as they perhape expected to, but it also seemed to to generate much admiration among their fellow Arab states.

So the official Baghdad radio has now begun complaining about the fact that nobody in the Arab world is coming to Iraq's defense. It was to be expected, saye the Baghdad radio, that Zionist cources and the United States and Britain would be condemning Iraq. "What is not natural," says Baghdad, "is this tight-lipped silence by Arab progressive orces regarding the battle that is now waged against Iraq."

Although denying that what has been going on in Iraq has influenced him, Iraq's veteran and respected ambassador to the United Nations has chosen this moment to announce his resignation from that post.

Perhaps he, too, did not choose to have come to the defense of the mass hang-

One prominent educator admits that our educational system is not adapted to the needs of today. But it never has been, adds Lee A. DuBridge, president of California Institute of Technology and recently chosen by Richard Nixon to be presidential science adviser.

"Education is not for today," say DuBridge. "It is of the past and it is for the future."

The troubles of today, the ghastly disruptions and grisly scenes of violence which have taken place on some campuses, are not due to the failures of our system, claims DuBridge, but to its suc-

We have brought higher education to 50 per cent of our young people, providing more and better opportunities to more of them than at any time in history. Why not 100 per cent? Scholarship and research have shed light on many problems which have puzzled the human intellect. Why are some problems still unsolved? A few hundred years ago no one understood anything about the nature of the universe, and everyone was apparently happy. Today we are overwhelmed with knowledge - and we scream with pain because we don't know everything. ince our colleges taught almost not ing except Latin, Greek, philosophy, theology and jurisprudence, and they were regarded as the pinnacles of civilization. Today they teach everything that the human mind has learned -

Because higher education has been so successful in so many areas, says Du-Bridge, it is now said to be a colossel failure because success is not yet visible in every sphere of human concern.

And yet, there are six million students now in college, and more are seeking admission every year. Americans are spending $15 billion a year on higher education, and this will increase by 10

When times are changing slowly, then past, present and future merge into one continuous pattern. But in times of rapid change, the present appears to be a discontinuity between the past and the future and no educational policy seems adequate to bridge the gap.

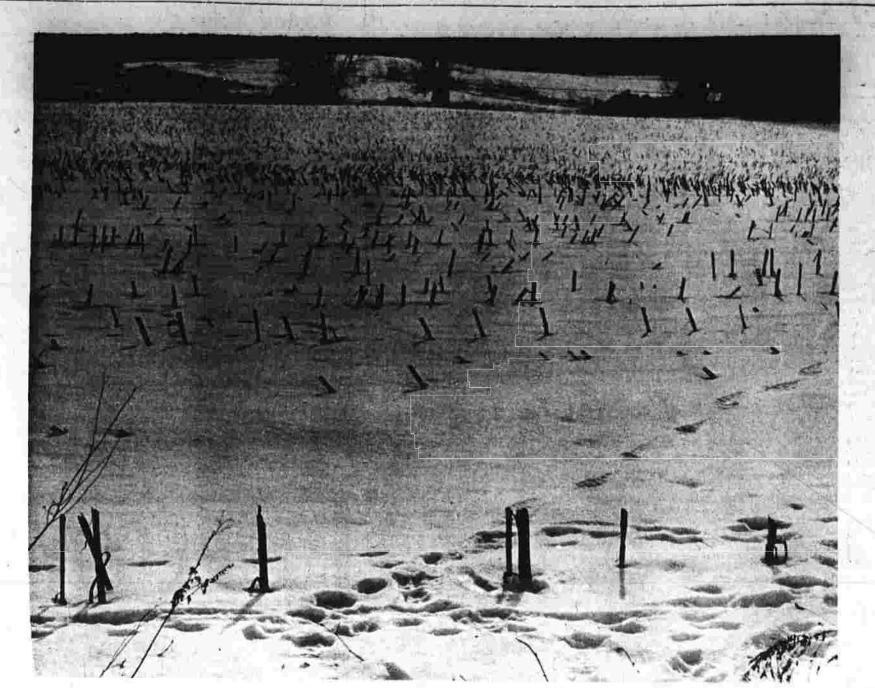

Turmoil is an inevitable characteristic of a rapidly changing world, and an educational system not in turmoil, Du-Bridge points out, would be one that is

Fruits Of A Sponsored Journey

Not long ago, two Boston grape dealers suggested that two of the city's rabbi make a fact-finding visit to the San Joa quin Valley of California to look into the grape-pickers' strike there at firsthard. The dealers, who paid the costs of the trip, don't welcome the facts that vestigators familiar with the Talmud's proscription of "exploitation of the hired man;" in any event, Rabbis Jacob Lants and Judea Miller found "wretched" conditions in 'iterrible' migrant labor camps, encountered growers frequently who sought to mislead them and misrepresent the facts, and concluded that "without federal labor relations provisions for farm labor, there is little imrediate possibility to settle the

These findings, which have been for warded to the Massachusetts Board of Rabbis with the result that the board has resolved to continue its backing for the nationwide boycott of California table grapes, are consistent with those of every other disinterested observer who has investigated the strike and its causes. Congress has no need for further testimony from witnesses to this disgraceful degradation of farm workers; it is long past time they shared the equal protection of federal laws. — NEW YORK POST.

This past week the atat the state capital announced a legislative proannually to parents with a lunch programs, textbooks, and bus transportation were schools, warnings were opening wedges, which, it granted, would lead to such an overt move for uninalb-ted state aid for religious schools. Many "broadminded" citizens belitted these admonitions, as they supported the fringe aid on the grounds of the specious
"child-benefit" plea.

The basic purpose of religious schools is to promote the spensoring religion with the spinsoring religion with its particular doctrines and practices. Therefore, any form or degree of public as-sistance tends to the establishment of a religion, in vio-lation of the First Amendment.
