The Senator's Statement ator Edward Kennedy last night did much to fill in the story of what appened after his car had plunged into that tidal pond. The previous conflict between the time he reported for the accident, and the time indicated by a witness who thought he saw a car heading in that direction much later in the night was apparently resolved; the question of how the Senator got back to the main island was given an answer; the Senator's description of the anguished torments and confusions running through his mind can be accepted There were also questions left unanswered. It must be assumed that the reason they were left unanswered, in a speech undoubtedly reflecting the collective judgment of his family and friends and associates, must have been that to try to answer them would have led on and on to other questions and risk more damage or misunderstandinevitable involvement of others. It was for such reasons, one supposes, that there was no discussion of why, even after two other people had participated in the search for the drowned girl, it still took so many hours for anyone else to be notified of the fact that the accident and the probable fatality had occurred. And it was for such reasons, one supposes, that there was no discussion of why the cookout in question was held at some secluded cottage especially rented for the occasion instead of at for instance, the Kennedy compound at Hyannis, and no discussion how the Senator and Mary Jo Kopechne happened to be in the Senator's cur on the wrong road Neither was there explanation of how a driver who was not intoxicated could ever find his way onto such a bridge as that from which his car toppled. The importance of circumstances is inevitably doubled when the last in the chain of circumstances turns out to be a death. No mere mortal can really dare assess the motivation - guilt, or troubled innocence, or a hopeless mixture and confusion of impulses in a situation to which there can be no happy ending - which decided, last night, that this, and only this, would be the Senator's story. As to what will happen, on the basis of the way the Senator left his situation last night, we can only hazard our opinion. It is that the Senator undoubtedly will find it easy enough to conclude that the people of his own state are demonstrating their desire to have him continue in his present political position, and that perhaps the real question then still left to be answered will be that of whether the Senator himself can stand the ordeal of functioning publicly as such a man marked by unanswered questions. As for whatever chance there may ever have been of the Presidency, we think that is gone. Whether or not there could have been a statement last night which would have retrieved that chance, we do not know. The statement given didn't.

The Russians Did Very Well The Russians began with a potentially rival Luna 15 of their own up in the vicinity of the moon, and they began without that live television coverage of the Apollo 11 mission the rest of Europe enjoy. But they ended up, the Russians, saying little about Lana 15 and much about Apollo 11, all of it in enthusiastic superlatives once the var ious successes of the mission were es tablished. And in the closing chapter for the splashdown, they joined the live television network.

We should say, then, that they did rather well, from their position of onetime leader in space ventures, in cop ing with a situation in which the United States was suddenly the great spectacular winner in the contest the two countries had been waging.

haved if the situation had been reversed. Would our television networks, for isntance, have been eager and willing to devote 30 hours of exclusive the moon? Might it not have taken little time for the natural and spontaneous admiration which would have been somewhere inside us all, as it was obviously inside the Russians as they watched our triumph grow, to work itself through the feeling that this was , after all, the accomplishment of a rival, and therefore a situation for some caution about how one felt?

Unquestionably, we Americans would eventually have emerged into a feeling of generous admiration for the accomplishment in which the Russians had

If we were forced to try to tell, in our own words what happened, we would have to say that the computer on board Engle which was in charge of guiding the lunar module down to its landing began, about eight minutes from landing, to con plain that it had too much work to do This condition of overload it was also carrying the duty of keeping Eagle oriented for possible flight back to Columbia in case the moon landing. had to be cancelled at the last minute. If the computer on board Eagle had actually succumbed to the overwork of which it was complaining, it would have found itself fudging up its task of guiding Eagle in to its landing, and would then have set that phase of its work back to the very beginning, and begun all over again.

If it had halted itself, to go back and make a fresh start, the computer would actually have deserted Eagle so far as its landing problem was concerned, for Eagle's time would have run out before the computer could catch up again. All this did not happen because ground control at Houston took over some portion of the excess work the computer was trying to do, and the computer, although still complaining, carried its own functioning forward. This is as much as we can understand, and as much as we can tell.

Obviously, it only scratches the surface of the meaning and understanding and technology which must be clear to ground cortrol centers, to the people of all kinds or special proficiencies who play a role in the space program. Through the ebb and flow of our country's history, the proud and mighty eagle, born to be free, swift, and strong, has symbolized our patriotism and our hope. In 1927 they called Charles Lindbergh the Lone Eagle as he took off into a misty New York dawn. The world held its breath until, with the moon looking over his shoulder, he landed in Paris on a runway marked by the headlight beams of automobiles.

Now another generation of fliers has assumed the eagle's name and spirit for their craft. Flying their lunar module, Astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin, with the earth looking over their shoulder, landed on the moon

The propeller for Lindbergh's plane was made by the men and women of our Hamilton Standard division. This week another generation of craftsmen at Hamilton Standard saw the backpack, or portable life support system, they made sustain Armstrong and Aldrin on man's first exploration of the moon's surface. They also made the environmental control system for the lunar module.

Meanwhile, Astronaut Michael Collins, in the mother spacecraft Columbia, kept his lonely vigil. The people at our Pratt & Whitney Aircraft division make the fuel cells which supply the electricity to power Columbia's various systems, such as the one for sending television to earth. As a by-product, the fuel cells also provided the astronauts with water for drinking and food preparation.

The men and women of United Aircraft are proud to be members of the American aerospace team. We congrat ulate the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. personified in Astronauts Armstrong, Aldrin and Collins. We congratulate our associates and colleagues in industry for their vital contributions. And congratulations to the American people who by their faith have shown once more that the strength and purpose of our country lies with its people.

Joan Blondell, Looking Back

By DAN KNAPP The Los Angeles Times

SHERMAN OAKS, Calif. Joan Blondell wore the calm expression of an uninvolved spectator at a crap game during this year's Emmy, Award ceremonies. To begin with, her nomination-for playing Lottie, the worldly-wise saloon-keeper in ABC's "Here Come the Brides"—had been a total surprise. "I don't know why they singled me out," she said. "I do so little in the show." On top of that, she was "damn sure I didn't stand a change of winning. So what was the use in getting all excited?"

Despite the surprise and the certainty, she hired a makeup man, costumer and a limousine, and showed up 20 minutes early. "As far as I'm concerned," she said, "being nominated is an honor that's practically as good as winning. And I know how disappointed I am when I watch an award ceremony and someone hasn't shown up."

During the awards, she quietly rooted for Peggy Lipton, the newcomer nominated in the same category for her work in "Mod Squad." When Barbara Bain of "Mission: Impossible" finally won, Joan was happy for her, but distressed that anyone could receive three Emmys in a row for playing the same role. "If someone wins once, that should be it, unless they go on to another role or a different series. The new people should be given a chance."

It all sounds so typical for a veteran Hollywood actress. But one visit with Joan Blondell at home and you realize that the humility and concern for others are authentic. She lives in a modest, three bedroom house in quiet suburban Sherman Oaks. She drives a small, sensible Volvo. She lives an hour away from work so she can be close to her four children. The glad hands, big talk, caviar and crackerjacks of Hollywood and Beverly Hills are over on the chic side of the mountains. And that suits her fine.

Sitting in her flower-festooned dining room, two walls of which are sliding glass, Joan Blondell looks anything but an everyday grandma. The mod black pumps, black bellbottoms and brightly patterned Indiancum-hippie shirt look too good, too natural for her to be closing in on 60 with more than a half century of show biz behind her. The blond hair is still fluffy and the oversized grey-green eyes are still swimming in mischief. Sure, she's added a few pounds, but not nearly enough to make you forget those fantastic legs-or to betray that she'd been among the top 10 box office draws as long ago as the '30s, has played in nearly 100 films, some 25 stage roles, and about 75 television showsnot to mention 15 years of vaudeville.

The offers still keep her on the move. Between shooting schedules for the first and second years of "Brides," she did a bit in "The Sphynx," a Warner Bros.-Seven Arts comedy about the kidnaping of a bunch of oldtime film idols, including Dorothy Lamour, Johnny Weissmuller and Butterfly McQueen. In May she flew to Nashville for a cameo role in the Spillane-Fellows production of Mickey's latter-day punch-andcruncher, "The Delta Factor." Now that she's shooting 'Brides' again, she's up at 4 every week-day morning. "I read a little first—I've always got a book within reach—then I make breakfast and drive over to the set. When I'm through I come home and have a snort, then dinner, read my lines for the following day and then I go to bed. When I'm alone, it's be-cause I want to be. Parties? Nightclubbing? Openings? You can have them. I'm bored with all that jazz."

A comparison of today's actors with the greats she's play-ed with? "Oh, the kids today are fine," she said. "I just don't get the thrill I used to when I looked into Spencer Tracy's or

One-fifth of the Fifth Dimension singing group performing on "Harlem Festival." The all-black show will be seen Monday 10 to 11 p.m. on CBS.

Joan Blondell Looking Back

(Continued from Page One) York City, then her parents, Ed Blondell and Kathryn Cain, took their pantomime act back on the road. World War I was to vaudeville berself - at the age of 3. "We were in Sydney, Australia. With a 10-act bil that included George M. Cohan, They let me do terrible impersonations during the af-

Later she danced, sang and told gags. She was a leggy, blond busty beauty in her late teens when vaudeville suffered its celebrated coronary in 1928. Then came the Crash and Ed quit vaudiville and won a part in a Broadway play. While in that show, Joan auditioned for "Maggie the Magnificent," a new play by George Kelly, who had become the toast of Broadway with "Craig's wife."

"Every actor and actress alive wanted a part. There were so many waiting I was sure I'd never get to see Kelly. Finally I got into his outer office and found myself jammed up against a handsome red-haired guy. He they're about to pop out of your head. What's there to be afraid of?" Then she was ushered into Kelly's private oftant man in the theater at the time, but he was very kind. He sat me down and quietly began reading a few scenes from "Maggie," sort of acting them out, I howled. It was so funny. The writing was so good. I guess he could see that I really dug it, felt it. I got the part. And he never asked me to read a line."

The handsome, red-headed actor got the other lead. His "Maggie" plucked them both from obscurity the night it opened. Kelly wrote another "Penn Arcade," which Al Jol son bought and then sold to Warner Bros.—with the stipula tion that Blondell and Cagney had to go with it. Darryl Zanuck, then head of production at the studio, took them aside and said, "Well, we're stuck with you for one picture Do you think you can play the

"We both said 'no' in unison without looking at one another. the male lead, and Evelyn Knapp got my part." The two young Broadway stars were played them as if they each had two weeks to live. "Zanuck saw the rushes and flipped," Joan on the back lot while we were working-no agents, no time to think-and signed us each to a five-year contrast. For practi-

And One Of the Boys Is a Girl

NEW YORK (NEA) - Satanother world. Norman Prescott is a Saturday morning expert. He heads up, with Lou Scheimer and Hal Sutherland, Filmation, the animation studio that turned out series like "Sup-erman," "Bestman," "Aquaerman," man" and the big hit, "Archie." This year, on ABC, will come another Filmation series, "The Hardy Boys."

Prescott says that the Saturday morning audience is made up of people between the ages of two and 14. That limits, strictly, what can be done. You can't animate Dostoevsky for two-year-olds.

"The Hardy Boys" will be a detective series - but non-violent, in keeping with the current fad - and "The Hardy Boys" will also sing rock 'n roll between clues

In fact, a real, live group call

TV-Radio Sales and Service

ed The Hardy Boys has been assembled. They will make personal appearances and do television guest shots and make records.

Prescott's animators created the characters for "The Hardy Boys" (there is one girl among the Boys, which could only hapurday morning, on television, is pen in Hollywood) and then the casting department went out and found singers who looked like the live drawings.

Prescott believes there is a big future for animation on television. He has the rights now to all Newspaper Enterprise Association comics (except for Major Hoople, who is owned by Fox) and is working on an Alley Oop show and another show which would feature several comics in one program.
