Another Conservative

It will be pleasant, some day, to see resident Richard Nixon come to the int when he himself considers that the balance of ideologies has been so well restored to the various federal derarchies that he himself can go out some important post,

Meanwhile, the new President continues to satisfy a personal thirst, as well as the thirst of about half of the nation's population, for the conservative touch and influence in high places, for

The legitimate question, really, is not whether the President is selecting a conservative, but whether the conservative he selects happens to be decent, worthy, and capable of functioning responsibly in a democratic system of checks and

On this basis, we should say that the criticism of the President's nomination of Federal Judge Clement F. Havnsworth Jr., of South Carolina, to the place on the Supreme Court vacated by Justice Abe Fortas is not valid criticism. It establishes that Judge Haynsworth is not a gushing liberal; it infers, on that basis, and on the basis of his geography, that Judge Haynsworth is not a crusade in behalf of racial integration policies. This is perhaps too bad, if it is true, but it is not valid reason for rejecting a nomination to the Supreme Court. This nation's future progress in civil rights issues must depend on law and on consensus which includes much more than the clearly liberal sector of our population. If our chance of progress toward collecting the full promise of our own democracy can be shaken by the appointment of one or two middle-road conservatives to the Supreme Court, we do not really have much chance at all. Quite conversely, it could be argued that the precise thing we need in order word everywhere. o get real movement on the civil rights front, and real acceptance of the inevitability of what is right is the presence, in high place, of conservative leadership which has demonstrated its own acceptance of, and decided to give its own future cooperation to, the redemption of the full American promise. We suggest, to be quite specific, that Justice Haynsworth, if he is confirmed, might quite conceivably be found casting a vote on a civil rights or segregation have seemed the more unlikely, but which the more convincing turn toward peace in Vietnam - a bringing home of up all this ancient history just as the troops by Richard Nixon or one by starting to see eye-to-eye. But it won't last anyway, given what that history suggests. It weems the liberal pundits reflect the faddishness of any in-bred pack. The pundit who succeeds is the is all three of them presenting the late than 12 nor more than 24 hours before

> As for what our little historical excursion suggests about the President. he emerges as difficult to put in any ideological pigeonhole. If he deems the Supreme Court needs a stiff dose of caution, he will find relatively convervative appointees. If he deems almost anything would be an improvement over current welfare system, he wil plunge ahead with reforms liberals had feared to broach. He seems interested in the long view rather than Washington fads, and his decision-making is, in a word, pragmatic.

Washington commentator on American politics has stendfastly predicted precisely that kind of Presidency. His name to give credit where it's due, is Richard M. Nixon.-WALL STREET JOURNAL

Mix in with such a practiced host the perpetual motion cycle of the entertainment world's established list of eligible guests and you have three one and a half hour shows each night of such similarity of tricks and levels that one wonders how the patrons or the sponsors can ever decide between them. Nonetheless, there are now three of them, all guaranteed adequate sponsors. It may be something of an irony that, just as the three networks have settled themselves down into this great classic competition for the midnight audience, still another talk and host show, offered at a more civilized hour, is threatening to become more popular than all three of the master shows put together. And there are at least two other shows of the same character, and in no way less luminous talent, available for promotion into the prime time limelight. In any case, this moment in August. 1969, when the three networks finally could sit back and concede perfect imitation of one another, seems the proper moment to make one of those no-risk prophecies available to anybody who is not a network executive

The prophecy is that the time will now soon come when the American public is so sick of the opening simper, the middle sex, and the late sign-off of the midnight show that it will openly admit doing what it really does most of the time now-going to bed no matter who's on the mervejohnnyjoe.

No less an authority than James Reston of the New York Times tells us, with scarcely a nod to the President's previously Nixon is zigging to the left.

For a while, indeed, the keen-eyed could occasionally spot a good word for the President in surprising places. We e p cially remember a gracious editorial in the Washington Post that, on to way to the strong conclusion that the President's podium style was like. "one hand c'apping," mentioned in passing that his national priorities were exctly r got. Priorities that was the big

Washington Fits And Moods

Remember the Old Nixon-that in decisive, do-nothing President who ran a caretaker Government, swung to the right, and lost the political initiative to the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, a front for Senator Edward Ken

All of which tells us a good deal more about the pundits than about Mr. Nixon. Indeed, from the first it has been both instructive and amusing to watch the fits and moods of the Washington pundits an they contemplated the new President. Shortly after the inauguration they suddenly discovered that Mr. Nixon didn't have horns and a tail, and a wave of liberal writer in Washington woke What priorities means is you don't do Capitol Hill in his first 100 days. And though the Precident got an outright win in the epic battle over the ABM

Along the way, the Administration expre-sed some doubt about whether cutting off funds to Southern schools is exactly the best way to help educate Southern Negroes. And it guessed maybe the same laws that apply in Mississippi and Alabama ought to apply in Illinois or New York. Instead of filling a health post with one ultra-liberal physician, the President filled it with another ultraliberal physician. From such clues Washingtion supersleuths put together the famous swing to the right and the
