By ALFRED FRIENDLY

The Washington Post CAIRO-Three years ago, it was mummified ibises. This year, it's mummified baboons To use the favorite and professionally cautious word of their discoverer, the distinguished Egyptologist Walter Brian Emery, the situation is "intriguing." The million or more iblacs had been embalmed in bitumen 1500 or so years ago, wrapped in linen windings, embellished with applique figures and stow ed in conical clay pots capped with saucer-shaped tops.

The baboons, similarly mum mified and similarly wrapped. were found sitting on their haunches in well-carpenteres boxes which had been filled with gypsum-coment-as if they were so many rubbed-out gangsters prepared for consignment to the bottom of the East River. Dr. Emery, Edwards professor of Egyptology at the Iniversity of London, has found 500 of them. The discovery is unique in Egyptian excavations. The baboon cemetery, come upon in the last few months and only recently announced, is at Saqqara, a desolate plateau 20 miles south of Carlo, dominated by the step pyramid of Pharoah Zoser, the oldest stone monumental structure known. It discovery was less a matter of serendipity than of brilliant intuition and scientific, deduction. It came about in the course of a search to which Emery has now dedicated his life: a hunt for the shrine and tomb of Imbotep, architect of the step-pyramid. Zoser's grand vizier.

He Discovers Baboon Mummies In Search for Physician's Tomb the world's first physician, who was later to become worshiped as a diety himself. Reserved about theories, careful about guesses, hesitant about predictions, Emery is nevertheless sure that he is now within the shrine complex itself; somewhere close by must be the sanctum sanctorum. He may find it tomorrow, or ten years from now-or never. But it's there.

The baboons, like the ibises, give abundant additional validity to Emery's thesis. For both creatures were identified with Thoth, god of the moon, mathematics, learning and enlightenment. They were his sacred animals-indeed, in the close to inexplicable theology of the ancient Egyptians, incarnations of the god himself. And Imboten came to be equated with Thoth assuming his attributes, power and even identity. The baboons were along the sides of two underground passages, one above the other. One passage runs, 140 yards, the other 80. They are about four feet wide and six to seven feet high. Floor and ceiling are of solid rock; the material that was clawed out between them was amailer stones, gravel and sand. "Cut into the sides of the galleries and reinforced by partitions of stone blocks are niches three to four feet on a side Inside each was a cementfilled wood coffin. All but two of the 500 mummies found had been smashed systematically in what must have been a tedious piece of labor. What is it all about? At least what is the supposition? For an answer, one must go back to the beginning and trace Emery's work and hypotheses. A husky, soft-spoken, humor ful but no-nonsense fellow Emery made his name decades ago with excavations on the Saqquara plateau of the tombs Lof the first dynasty pharonhs (ca. 2900 B.C.) and of nearby mastabas - massive rectangt iar burial buildings - of the nobles of the third dynasty (2686-2613 B.C.)

Premiers In Peking The mere fact that Russian Premier

cosygin could turn aside on his trip some from Hanoi and fly to Peking and hold a meeting with Chinese Premier Chou En-lai is full of surprise and full of meaning, even though we are not ikely to know what the two men ever ald to one another.

The surprise will be for those people of both Russia and China who have been hearing their respective propaganda bureaus pour out the vitriol about one

And the surprise will be for all those world capitals which have been following the trouble along the Chinese-Russian frontier with mixed emotions - half hoping that the two Communist giants would get at each other's throats in earnest, half dreading what any such war would be likely to mean to all man-

There is no doubt everyone is surpris-

What the meaning of the meeting may be is not so easily established

But it reminds us all of a few things. Although schism between adherents of the same religion or ideology is usually the most savage and bitter of all human divisions, the measurement of the actual separation can remain narrow. Until they are really engaged in the physical process of destroying one another, it is going to remain easier for the two Comunist giants to get back to guarded oliteness with one another than for sither of them to find common cause with any section of the outside world. And, although we tend to think of everything Communist as something rigidly typed and living and functioning in strictly enforced conformity, the truth is that, in Communist regimes as in others, there are reactionaries, moderates, and liberals.

And Premiers Kosygin and Chou, although neither may have the ultimate power his official title would indicate, are big men in their regimes who happen to be moderate, and more likely to seek the opening for an accomodation than to insist on the opportunity to have millions of their countrymen die for one particular version of the Communist ideology.

This can be why such a meeting could take place.

What it means, long range, for China and Russia themselves, is beyond guess. And so is what it may mean, short range, for us in Vietnam. Should Russia and China come to agree on a common policy for Vietnam, what would it be? A policy to join in supporting North Vietnam to a greater persistence in waging the war against American peace pressures? Or a policy to join in persuading Hanoi that the acceptance of stalemate offers the best and perhaps the only way of getting United States military force eventually off the Asian mainland?

As always, in any situation where a nation finds it impossible to guess what course of conduct others may follow, the only safe formula for it itself to try to follow is that of doing what would be right by its own standards and its own principles. We cannot anticipate all the actions and policies of others. We can try to be true to our own best instinct and analysis, Currently, we are trying to drive for peace in Vietnam by trying to make the words and acts of peace win a dominance over the words and acts of war. If that is our policy, and we think it is right, it should conmue to be our policy, no matter what ve guess about what might have been said between the two premiers in Peking.

"Its Own Planet"

Continued study of the pictures sent back by the two Mariner missions has now rescued Mars from the early ignominy of seeming to be nothing more than just another Moon.

Now, according to one of the scientists who has been analyzing the pictures. "We end up with the conclusion that Mars is really its own planet"

The development which has convinced our scientists that Mars is neither Moon, with its monotonous dust and craters, nor Earth, with its teeming life, is the appearance, in the final processing of the Mariner pictures, of a rather vast region on Mars which offers a "chaotic terrain" full of wild hills and valleys, and unexpectedly warmer than other sections of the planet.

We may not know what this region is really like until we take closer pictures, time in 1971. But at least it is something strange and mysterious and romantic, even though it does not do much to reestablish the pre-Mariner speculation about the possibility of some kind of life on Mars.

We were in danger of falling into the bored assumption that having seen one planet was the same thing as having seen them all. We were in danger of having the very heavens declare their

Ho Chi Minh

Ho Chi Minh is mourned today by his followers as a patriot but to the rest of the world his dedication to the cause of nism superseded love of country. The tragic consequences of his refusal to budge from a fixed position is written on the scarred land and mid faces of the Vietnamese people who have b offered up as sacrifices for a materialis-

Behind the gentle facade was a tough, dedicated, Moscow-trained conspir who served for many years as a Soviet agent in Asia. He was thoroughly prepared by the Kremlin to wage revolut on an international scale on behalf of a totalitarian way of life.

That early training so encrusted his political viewpoint that he was unable to tolerate more than his concepts in his homeland. In a position to press for a truly free Vietnam after he was instrumental in the successful struggle against the French, he clung to the cause of communism. Ho never understood that his nation was populated by people of diverse and deep allegiances not necessarily consistent with his own restrictive and authoritarian political philosophy. Even as he died, North Vietnam's negotiators in Paris refused to give more than a faint hint of what it would take to break the Paris peace talks deadlock The U.S. was told that if it gets its troops out of Vietnam fast enough, North Vietnamese would "examine this factor and take it into account." This is so vague that it could mean anything. A withdrawal of 100,000 American troops could tr'gger a Communist offensive and Hanoi would be in a position to deny that it had ever agreed to reduce the level of fighting.

Now that it is necessary for Hanoi t organize new leadership to replace Ho. the Communists might require "breath ing time." If there is a power struggle, or a period of uncertainty, Hanoi might find it advantageous to mark time or the battlefield for a while in return for a major reduction in the number of troops. This, however, doesn't preclude a return to full-scale fighting. Nevertheless, Ho's death leaves some room for change. It can be seized upon by those North Vietnamese who put patriotism before rigid ideology, to shift from the position of intransigence that caused Ho to fall his countryme NEW HAVEN REGISTER.

A Revival Of Thrift

A major manufacturer of aluminum is experimenting with a program to sal vage beer and soft drink cans made o this metal. Collections of such cans are being made in Miami and Los Angeles. If successful and the salvage costs make re-smelting profitable, the program will be expanded to other cities.

We are a wasteful nation, a by-product of our general affluence. We waste preclous natural resources, discard item. before their full usefulness has been lost. We throw away so many things that many cities, including Meriden and Wallingford, face problems of future disposal areas for rubbish. These were once called ash dumps but the general use o oil, gas and electricity for cooking and eating has changed that. You don't have to be eligible for Medicare to remember days when anything of value as junk was saved' Junkmen made regular tours of business and resisections, paying (but not much) for old iron and other metals, rags and paper. Cord and twine was maved ad rolled into balls. The proudest kid on the block was the one with the largest ball of tinfoil. Changes in packaging. particularly cigarettes have made oldstyle tinfoil a rare item these days. Tin is too costly for such use. Municipal refuse disposal areas have 'pickers', and some pay for the exclusive rights. They ferret out and set aside for sale as junk items others have discarded. It must provide a living for some men have been scavenging rubbish heaps for years.

The introduction of the "flip top" has increased the use of cans over bottles and has boosted the demand for light aluminum. It remains to be seen whether Miami and Los Angeles are the best test areas for aluminum salvage. Perhaps New England would be better. While beer and soft drink consumption in this area may not be as high as in the two cities selected the thrift instinct still flickers in New England. Perhaps the prospect of salvage from empty aluminum cans could fan it into flam MERIDEN RECORD

000000 THE BIBLE SPEAKS by Eugene Brewer

In religion inconsistenc s the trademark of the majority. The very claim to be ing Christian while casting doubt on the authenticity o its sources, is an incongruity. Our only knowledge of Jesus Christ is the record in the New Testament, Since even the enemies of Christianity in that period made no seri ous effort to deny these re ports, and since no inexplicable conflict has been found therein, it ill behooves men ninteen centuries later to arrogantly depreciate their historicity. It is the height of inconsistency to call one-self a Christian while denying our only definition of a

Others theoretically accept the Biblical authority in Christianity, but are unwill-ing to accept the necessary conclusions. For example, Jesus forbade addressing n in with religious titles of honor (Mast 23:8-10), but many, who claim a funda-mental faith in the Scrip-tures, violate this prohibi-tion daily calling men tion daily, calling men "Father," "Reverend," etc.

Nasser Asks To Postpone Summit

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) Egypt's President Gamal Abdel Nasser is going to Moscow Sept. 23 for talks and medical treatment and has asked for postponement of a proposed Islamic summit meeting, a Beirut newspaper said today. Morocco's foreign minister, Abdel Boutaleb arrived in Cairo Friday and proposed that Islamic heads of state meet in Rabat, Sept. 22-24. Reports that Namer planned another visit to the Soviet Union have been filtering out of the Egyptian capital but there has been no official confirmation Beirut's newspaper Al Jarida reported that the Egyptian govnephews. ernment had asked that the summit be postponed. It said the report reached Lebanon's Foreign Ministry through the Lebanese ambassador to Cairo. Nasser, who is 51, made a lengthy visit to Russia in July 1965, and underwent medical treatment at a Soviet health resort. Wolves Topic for A Show

By CYNTHIA LOWRY

HOLLYWOOD (AP) - Irwin Rosten, a bearded, out-doorsy sort of man, seemed cooped up in his pleasant office as he talked about mountain climbing and preserving the timber wolf. He is the executive producer of NBC's upcoming "Mono-gram" series, four hour-long actuality programs that will cover a wide variety of subjects from saving the wolf to tracing mankind's development during the past four million years. Rosten and his partner, Nicholas Noxon, went into the documentary business after working on CBS' very successful "National Geographic Society" series. Now Rosten is largely office-bound while Noxon roams the world shooting film.

"We make programs about things we are interested in," Rosten explained. "Nick read an article about wolves being studied by some university scientists because they are on the threatened list. We started some research of our own and then contacted the people making the study."

Assembling an hour's worth of film took months and the camera crew traveled from Alaska to northern Minnesota in the hitterest winter weather to find their subjects.

"But not until we had tested our own gear thoroughly and put our special cameras to the test by storing them in the freezer section of the refrigerator," he said.
