President Nixon At His Best

3, the least distinguished performance in the career of Richard Nixon was succeeded, last night, by perhaps the strongest and most impressive of all his appearances before the American people.

The President, last night, was fully informed. He knew what he was thinking, and he had the words for saying it effectively. He moved from one strong answer and seemingly unassailable position to another. He demonstrated political

His best demonstration of the latter quality came when, on the economic front, he bluntly said a veto no to the tax bill now being prepared in Congress.

It is a tax bill which has its appeal to the nation's taxpayers, to whom it represents a long overdue promise of a little relief, and a little justice, at last.

But it is also a tax bill which is bad for the economy of the nation as a whole.

And the President, taking his firm stand against it in its present form, served notice that he is really fighting inflation.

Everybody, of course, thought he ought to be doing this when he did not seem to be doing it too well or accomplishing too much. Now that he is actually doing it, now that his policies actually seem to be putting a slow-down bite on the runaway tendencies of the economy, the same off-stage critics who once accused him of doing nothing are now afraid he Psychologists state that one reason per ple don't like to attend funerals is that the death of a close friend or relative reminds them of their own mortality. This feeling is normal and people should not deny it by failing to face the subject staying away from funerals, for example where their presence will seem a godsend to a bereaved family
