By GEORGE LARDNER The Washington Post

FREDERICKTOWN, Pa. At least one of the suspects in the killing of United Mine Workers official Joseph Yablonski has started to talk according to reliable sources.

"It's quite apparent by now," one law enforcement official conceded. He added that "maybe more than one" has been divulging inside information to federal authorities but he refused to elaborate.

The first clear sign that investigators have an inside track came from a frosty search for clues through the ice of the Monongahela River here.

Scuba divers for the FBI and Pennsylvania State Police reportedly recovered a 30-30 rifle from the river shortly before noon, just outside Fredericktown on the way to Vesta mine No. 5.

The search started late Friday night and was kept up Saturday some five miles from the Yablonski home.

Teachers Lobby On Education Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - Hundreds of teachers and other education workers started a member-by-member lobbying effort in Congress today, aimed at overturning President Nixon's promised veto of the $19.7 billion education bill.

Their drive came even before the House completed congressional passage of the measure, expected later in the day. Charles Lee, in charge of the

The new ruling bars classification to 1A from any deferred or exempt category. Student deferments comprise one such group.

1A category.

The government rationalized the massive reclassification of war protesters by saying they were not being punished for their actions but were being declared delinquent for not having draft cards in their possession. But Black said Congress, in writing draft law, clearly intended to give students a deferment and "did not specifically provide or in any way indicate that such deferred status could be denied because the registrant failed to possess his registration certificate."

Black noted that the high court, in December 1968, held that draft boards may not take away a ministerial student's exemption as punishment for his opposition to U.S. involvement in the Asian war. Black said that so far as all students are concerned, "we fall to see any relevant practical or legal differences between exemptions and deferments."

Today's decision was given on an appeal by Timothy J. Breen, 21, of Westport, Conn., who turned in his draft card to a Boston cleryman in November 1967 to protest the war. Breen, management of Penn Central some creditable, posisuccessful service between York and Washington, is also the ment which slips into practices which make it difficult for its clients to find out which trains are still running on its Connecticut lines.

"Railpax"

It is good management when it offers the Metroliner. It is something else when it seems, almost by design, to make a mystery of what service it still offers the people of Connecticut.

The contrast makes a point, which applies to almost every present day railroad management in the country.

Railroad management no longer regards its provision of passenger service as a one-piece obligation of its franchise. Instead, it has shifted into a contention that it must be guaranteed a profit on each passenger-mile of operation or be allowed to discontinue that particular passenger-mile. The railroads originally expanded to provide passenger service everywhere it was needed, frequently balancing lines that were not yet profitable against lines that were. The railservice wherever it does not offer its own on the mile profit.

The result is that railroads no longer care about passenger service as a linked national commodity. If they happen to have a few short lines they can operate profitably, they are willing to do so, but not to carry one mile farther the passenger who gets off at the end of that profitable line.

To be specific, the same kind of mangement which will pioneer with the Metro-liner between New York and Washington could also be the kind of management which would leave the would-be traveler to Canada stranded Springfield, and then leave the traveler to Springfield stranded at Hartford, and then the traveler to Hartford stranded at New Haven-all of which is undoubtedly just what the present Penn Central management would probably like to do and may indeed succeed in doing, if its hidden timetable trick works out well enough. The answer?

One version of the answer is now reported to be coming from the Nixon Administration, in a proposal which is going to be called "Railpax."

This would be a semi-public corporation which would be empowered and subsidized to take over responsibility for maintaining a nation-wide passenger

It would be "Railpax" which would take over all the passenger lines the railroads themselves no longer wished to operate. "Railpax" itself would determine which of these lines it considered proper and practical in its own national network. It would then upgrade the service being offered, with new equipnent, and new standards of service, in he hope that such a national passenger ervice, once atabilized and put into deent condition, would become profitable because it would attract back those passengers most of the railroads are now deliberately trying to drive away from the trains the railroads would prefer to discontinue.

The most important single thing about "Railpax" would be that it would be a management dedicated to maintaining rather than dismantling, passenger service as a linked national commodity, with the lean miles balanced against the fat miles, but with all the miles necessary to such a national network between major cities being operated.

For obvious lack of any better answer from the strictly private enterprise sector, we'hope the "Railpax" proposition proves sound and attracts the necessary support in Congress. And we hope that, when and if it gets into operation, it sets out to have Americans give them selves the best passenger train service in the world instead of what is now the

His Own Words "Abhorrent?"

How, one might ask, could Judge G Harrold Carswell ever come to say and mean the repudiation of himself he utter ed the other day, after the unearthing of that campaign speech he made 22 years

Confronted with what were unquestion ably his own words, Judge Carswell said

"Specifically and categorically, I denounce and reject the words themselves and the ideas they represent. They're obnovious and abhorrent to my personal philosophy. There is nothing in my private life, nor is there anything in my public record of some 17 years, which could possibly indicate that I harbor racist sentiments or the insulting suggestion of racial superiority."

So the question arises. Is it possible for anybody to turn on his own words the way Judge Carswell has

The answer is that only two circum stances could make it impossible.

One such circumstance would be th creation of a miracle individual who always perfectly right about everything, and who therefore never has the slightest reason to be invited to regret any past action or word.

The only other circumstance in which there would never be any question of an individual finding some of his own past actions or thoughts "abhorrent" would be in the case of a very small kind of human being incapable of growth of any

Most of us live in the great majority in between these two exempt individuals, the one the perfect miracle of a man, the other the least possible denominator of a man. For us, it would be strange indeed if we had not held, at one stage of our education and social development, some idea of which we are now somewhat ashamed. If we conduct a little research into our own feelings and prejudices as they have evolved over the years, we are almost certain to wind up conceding Judge Carswell the right to pronounce that views he himself expressed 22 years ago have now become "obnoxious and abhorrent" to him - and conceding him sincerity, too, in his renunciation.

Like we said, in our first discussion of his nomination, who knows, he may be another Hugo Black.

Don't Lose Faith In Parole

Appraising human personality is not an exact science. If it were, Louis Cofone Jr., 31, would still be in the Connecticu State Prison and a Wilton housewife would still be alive. Colone was arrested in New Orleans Thursday, eight days after he allegedly killed Mrs. Carol Diack, 33, of Wilton kidnapped another woman, and ther made off with her car. He is now in police custody awaiting return to Conecticut to answer to charges of murder, kidnapping, and robbery. Cosone's career in crime began early.

Before he was 15 years old, he had been an inmate at the State School for Boy n Meriden where he was regarded a an "incorrigible." Subsequently he was sentenced to Cheshire Reformatory for attempting to rape a New Canaan school sacher. He escaped from the reformatory in 1959, and for five days he robbed and raped until he was finally caught in a police chase and sentenced to the cticut State Prison in 1960. Conn Cofone's prison record was good. was not a trouble maker; he obeyed the rules, got along all right, and he made a good impression on the Parole Board which heard his application for parole in May 1969. The board had rejected his application two years earlier, but he was released last July 28. He kept faithfully to the terms of his parole, including reporting regularly to the parole officer right up to day before Mrs. Diack was murdered.

Parole Board members admit that they made a mistake in paroling Cofone, and they are "very concerned and disheart-' because of it, one board member has since said. But they made their decision fairly. They showed no favor. They acted upon Cofone's application in the light of his behavior in prison; his contacts with prison authorities and other inmates, his efforts at rehabilitation, and proposed program if paroled. mistake made in the release of Cofone should not be allowed to discredit either the board or the parole system. In terms of benefit to individuals and society, the parole system has worked remarkably well. It is only when a spetacular and tragic error appears that the system is called to public at-

"There needed to be a place for many of the students to hang out. They've been hanging out on Main St. in restaurants and other places and they didn't have a place to go. This will basically be a place where they can feel free to come in and be themselves." So says the Rev. Gary S. Cornell of South United Methodist Church, explaining why the church decided to open an

for students from Bennet Junior High School across the way. Students from Bennet have been using the facilities on Tuesday afternoons from 2:30 to 4 since last March, but the youth center, after a thorough redecoration, celebrated its formal opening at cere monies yesterday. The Rev. Mr. Cornell, associate minister, plays ping-pong with the students and talks to them, but his presence is not overbearing. He doesn't want youth to feel like they are coming to church to be lectured at and moralized to. He describes the activities as "unstructured." There are no organized activities

The largest group of Bennet students, according to Mrs. Nylin, come in after detention around 3:15. They are not allowed to smoke in the main room, but there's a smaller room next to it where they can smoke during cold weather when they cannot go outside. There's a record player and plano for music, comfortable chairs, ping-pong, and tables for sitdown games. Around the walls are peace symbols and posters calling for youth's involve-

In the next 100 years... Television will be 3-D. When we opened our doors 100 years ago, 3-D pictures were something you made by looking through a stereoscope. Who would have dreamed that some day people would watch events unfold in the middle of their living room in three dimensions without looking through anything but space?

That day is not as far off as you think. Today scientists are using lasers to take 3-D pictures called holograms. Instead of being projected on a screen, holograms are viewed in mid-air. The image looks so real that only when you try to touch it do you find nothing there.

Holography is already moving out of the lab. Some day you'll be able to watch your favorite team play in the middle of your living room. It will almost seem as though you're right there on the field.

Tomorrow, you may be saving for a brand new laser TV set. And we'll be there to help you out with banking techniques and systems just as advanced as 3-D television. We've been thinking about the future for 100 years.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Judge G. Harrold Carswell of Tallahassee, Fla., swore today at a hearing on his nomination to be a Supreme Court justice that "I have no notions, secretive, oper or otherwise, of racial superiority.'

"I am not a racist," he told the Senate Judiciary Committee in repudiating anew a white supremacy speech he made 22 years ago as a candidate for the Jeorgia legislature.

Carswell also testified that he had never been an officer nor director nor had anything to do with the incorporation of a country club in Tallahassee that had taken over a municipal golf course after a 1955 Supreme Court ruling that municipal rec reation facilities must be deseg regated.

This was in reply to published reports that he was a director of the Capital City Country Club that acquired the course a few months after the court's ruling and that operated on a racially segregated basis.

The 50-year-old southerne now a judge on the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, testified that he has never been an officer or director of any country club anywhere. He remarked that he is not even a
