Your Dental Health

This is the third in a series of six articles on dental health published by The Herald, in cooperation with the Manchester Dental Society, in observance of National Children's Dental Health Week, Feb. 1-7.

How safe and effective are those new water-jets that have recently appeared on the market? Do dentists recommend them for their patients and are they safe for children to use?

The American Dental Association is now in the process of evaluating such devices and has already recognized one product as "an effective aid to the toothbrush in a program of good oral hygiene." Other similar devices are being studied, and if they are accepted by the association, the profession and the public will be notified. The association agency responsible for evaluating and classifying such devices is the Council on Dental Materials and Devices. The council's evaluation program classifies devices as acceptable, provisionally acceptable or unacceptable.

Safety of devices is an important consideration when products are classified, the council has emphasized. For example, the one device recognized by the council is listed by Underwriters Laboratories, Inc., a national agency which examines appliances for operating safety. Some of the council's guide lines for its evaluation program include testing for technical safety of an appliance; testing to make certain that such devices have a safety valve or mechanism to monitor water pressure: evidence that unsupervised use of the appliance will not be harmful to oral health and evidence that the appliance intermediate Care Semi-can be used by a large segment private, noon-2 p.m., and 4 p.m. Also, Mrs. Robert Whipple and daughter, Box Mt. #### Pitching In The Planes

Wednesday, February 4

With eyes wide open, the great powers of the world are contributing to the continuing crisis in the Near East the one thing it needs least and last - an assurance of an escalation of the arms with which it can fight itself out.

When France acts alone to supply a few planes to Libya, President Nixon quickly develops a sympathetic ear to , Israel's request for new planes. Almost instantly, Russia announces that, in such case, it will feel required to supply more planes to Egypt.

It is that easy, it is almost that automatic, for the great outside powers to forget what they have so often given common acknowledgment to over the past 20 years of the existence of Israel that it is their responsibility to see to it that arms traffic to the Near East is controlled in the interests of peace. Any true observance of that responsibility would require concentration on keeping the total supply of arms to the region as low as possible.

What is now threatening to happen, in runaway fashion, is an orgy of building up the total amount of arms in the region, all on the basis of preserving a balance of military power between the two adversaries.

Israel, and the United States, can't afford to let Egypt, and Russia, progress toward any kind of real fighting equality in the Near East. Egypt, and Russia, can't afford to let Israel gain even more superiority than it already has. So each outside power now has motivation to provide additional arms, but no mandate from sanity anywhere to stop and look at what the rsult of additional arms will have to be, sooner or later.

We cannot, in playing such a game, ever be a true friend to Israel, any more than Russia can be a true friend to Egypt. It is a game which builds increased danger for everybody, security for none. Yet the big powers stand around, pitching in the planes, as if they were harmless coins into a fountain.

Lord Russell

His detractors called him "England's wisest fool." His admirera could have used the same words in reverse order and have saluted him as "England's most foolish wise man."

He was, on the record, both passionately wise and passionately foolish. Relatively early in his career, he built himself an esoteric expertness in the science of mathematics, becoming an accepted high and valuable authority in concepts and calculations the ordinary individual will never even begin to understand

Throughout the rest of his long life he pretended to have, for much more ordinary affairs, an understanding grandiloquently superior to that of ordinary men. Here his real credentials and his real authority were as questionable as they were uncontested in the field of mathematics.

For mathematics, he used a cool rationality.

For the public affairs of man, he had a passionate heart, which he loved to show to the public, bleeding.

Bertrand Russell must be classified, we suppose, in the ranks of the lesser saints-those whose careers jangle and confuse and upset mankind instead of erring peace and serenity. If only could have been as right one day as had a chance of being the next, it he could have settled into the role of the wise fool and refused that of the foolish wise man, he might have ended up a significant historical figure instead of just an amazing fireworks.

Down With Wine, Too According to the Wall Street Journal a newspaper which finds time, among its other more august functionings, to keep us hep to what is hip from one week to the next, the latest thing the younger generation is using to turn itself on is a cheap-priced, relatively lowalcoholic-content wine.

When the supply of marijuana runs low, or gets expensive, the wine in question proves a very agreeable substitute. It has, in fact, been much in evidence at some of the celebrated hipple gatherings of the year.

The younger generation, according to the Journal survey, finds the wine in uestion a little like the soda pop of its vesterdays, but with a nice little buzz added into it. Have a few glasses of it and you can take quite a pleasant trip just looking at it bubble in its glass. "It's a groovy thing to hold the glass up to the light and watch all those little bubbles do their thing."

One way or another, this debauchery of our youth will have to be stopped. It may be argued that such a modest little wine is harmless, much less harmless than marijuana. But what if it leads on to beer, and then to vodka and then to gin and then to rye? What has the elder generation ever done, to deserve so much trial and tribulation from its own children?

Age Of Reason On German Roads It did not take my sixteen years as "Guardian' correspondent in Germany to discover that the Germans had be come the most reckless and ruthless motorists in the world. By the early 1950s, when there were enough cars on the German roads to produce an atmosphere of hectic harassment, this fact was obvious. One learned to reckon with at least one serious fright for about every twenty miles of driving, plus a great deal of unpleasantness. The West Ger man accident rate was spectacularly higher than that of other West European countries, and West German law courts were clogged with cases which showed one dominant trend in German road thinking - the average driver's belief that he owned the road and nobody but himself belonged on it.

What a relief, where driving was concerned, to return to Britain six years ago. But six years ago now seems like another age. For in that short time, the motorist has been acquiring all the bad habits of his German counterpart. Motorway madness is just one of the symptoms. Just as the Germans did, the British - or all too many of them now drive like madmen in a bad fog (even prewar the Germans did that, and I witnessed a pile-up of 70 cars in 1937 on the Munich-Salzburg autobahn). Just like the Germans, British drivers pay not the alightest attention when a little light rain has fallen and roads are dangerously greasy, and they slow right down when the rain is heavier and the Road madness extends to small matters, too. There is some headtapping nowadays, although still not in the West German scale. In London at least there is increased shouting at other drivers. and that hall mark of bad road manners, the hard, angry stare on overtaking, Hogging the crown of the road is an old British vice, but wild cutting-in is a new and more dangerous one.

And there are minor lunacies, like pulling sharply out to the right (without ignaling, of course) when about to turn left-and the reverse. This, again, was something that German drivers did habitually: one wondered even if they had been deliberately taught to do it. The London taxi driver used to be a model of what one should be on the road. Today, no longer. The sight of London taxi drivers heading down long straight stretches of road with one or other indicator winking purposelessly has become an all too familiar sight. So has the taxi unchored half-way round a corner and holding up two lanes of traffic. Agreed, one can sympathise with the taxi driver. He used to reign supreme on London's streets; today he is an object to be passed and repassed, hustled and harried, and always left behind in the everlasting rat race of people in an everlasting hurry. He is very often a highly frustrated citizen, believing that his means of subsistence are being interfered with. A few weeks ago I was back in Ger many, driving a borrowed car for a fort-On the autobahn there was the same old deafening roar of noise, the same churning mass of speeding vehicles, the same gigantic lorries keeping up their 70-mile-an-hour average. But something was missing. In a fortnight, driving an old and borrowed car and tending to get in people's way I exerienced not a single case of head tapping or its Germanic emendation, the finger screwing violently into the side of the head. I was treated to no sulen stares, and only once did a mighty Mercedes flash its headlights at my rear from a range of several hundred yards (another habit which is becoming endemic in Britain). I saw some dangerous cutting-in, but very little of it. And not a single crash! It was uncanny. I learnt the answer from the British Embassy in Bonn, During the last year there has been a concerted effort to restore reason on the German roads Press, radio, and television have all helped. The ADAC, the German motorists' organization, and the Ministry of Transport have organized "politeness ampaigns." The German driver has seen told how to behave on the road, and nas reacted well. I reflected that at one time I used to suggest to the German

Ministry of Transport once a year that a coliteness campaign should be instituted, and was invariably told that it was not needed "since we have our road regulations." Evidently, it took about twenty years before anything was done. I hope that we in Britain, do not wait as long is that. TERENCE PRITTIE IN THE MANCHESTER (ENGLAND) GUARD

MILAN, Italy (AP) - Italy's richest and most modern city is gradually getting rid of its

Air pollution has been reduced 40 per cent fils winter, according to official measurements. The ordinary Milanese doesn't need special equipment to see the difference. "In the past I would remove a good inch of black powder from my balcony in a day," says housewife Concetta di Noia. "This winter I haven't had this trouble.' For Carlo Bocca, a taxi driver, the antismog campaign means reduced eye strain. During foggy days, of which Milan has many, "it used to be almost dark, even at noon," Bocca says. "This winter it's much clearer".

Doctors report a reduction in respiratory ailments. The campaign has obviously made a more livable city of Mi lan, an industrial-commercial complex of 1.7 million. Milan has chic shops and office buildings in the center, ringed by residential neighbor hoods and, farther out, by smoke-spewing factories like the Pirelli rubber plant. It also has something in common with another smog-plagued city, Los Angeles. It's in a basin, The mountain-ringed Padana

Valley is a natural fog-gathering zone. Lack of wind stag nates the fog, trapping smoke. Early last year city officials voted against heating systems using a crude grade of petrole um known here as naphtha. The owners of 18,000 such systems were ordered to switch to a better grade of oil. So far 12,000 systems have been replaced and the others are to be changed soon. The total cost is estimated at $29 million.

This is similar to action taken in U.S. cities where large users of oil have switched to grades that yield less smoke.

Some industrial plants have moved outside Milan, selling valuable sites and also saving the price of conversion equip-

A city official said: "In the case of an excess of monoxide drivers are invited to have their cars checked by a mechanic. It it in their interest to undergo the controls because faulty pipes that emit too much monoxide are submitted to fines,"

Paul G. Roberts of West Hartord, president of the Coca-Cola Sottling Co. of Hartford, has been named general chairman of a $800,000 development campaign of the Charter Oak Council, Boy Scouts of America. Dr. Harold S. Barrett of 120 S. Lakewood Circle is council board president. Charter Oak Council includes 50 communities in Hartford and Tolland Countles. Emphasizing that almost every aspect of scouting shows record increases in the last decade and will continue to climb in the 1970's, Roberts said that the Charter Oak Council plans to improve scouting facilities by increasing the capacity of the Lake of Isles Scout Reservation in North Stonington by one third, completely refurbishin Camp Pioneer in New Hartford and expanding the Council Serv ice Center in Hartford. The plain fact is that we're bursting at the seams," Roberts said. "Membership has climbed from over 12,000 in 1960 to almost 17,000 now, and projections show the council must serve a membership of 23,000 boys by 1976. The number of adult volunteers has grown from under 5, 000 in 1960 to a projection of over 8,000 in 1976. Almost twice as many boys now participate in camping trips as did in 1960 and this figure will doub again in 1976."

Soda Pop Lures Saigon Troops From VC Chase

SAIGON (AP) - Viet Cong guerrillas ambushed a convoy carrying 200 cases of soft drinks to U.S. Army headquarters north of Saigon Monday night. The Viet Cong didn't get the soda pop, but the South Vietnamese troops sent out to chase the Viet Cong did, U.S. investigators reported today.

The convoy was made up of trucks driven by Vietnamese civillians with an escort of American military police in jeeps They picked up the cases o soda and were on their way north to Long Binh when Viet Cong guerrillas opened fire. One MP and one Vietname driver were wounded, and some vehicles were damaged. Then the South Vietnamese troops were ordered out in armored cars to chase the Viet Cong. "The armored cars car down the road," said one Amer ican officer. "The armored car stopped, looted the soft drink and neglected to go after the Viet Cong. Some military police men chased the armored the road but could ne chase them any farther because they went back into their compound."

The South Vietnamese also got away with a field radio mounted on one of the escort jeeps, an American source said. The South Vietnamese command had no comment on the report. Neither did the U.S. Command.

El-Alaml's personal chauffeur and the latter's family also received permission to reside in East Jerusalem, an Interior inistry spokesman said.

Pierce Brigade Fights to Save Pierce's Home

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Any order to destroy the family home of the 14th U.S. President will be blocked by the Pierce Brigade, the citizens' group which was successful three years ago in having urban renewal officials accept a plan to ave the historic house.

Franklin Pierce bought the two-story dwelling in 1842. Last year, all the houses on Montgomery Street below the Pierce Manse were leveled to make room for an urban renewal prorban renewal officials ruled n October the white frame house owned by Pierce until 1848 would have to go as well. But the Pierce Brigade ap-pealed to Washington and a reprieve was won for the winter. Harold Yeaton, a school teacher and president of the group, said today he was "starread a news release from urban renewal" the house is to be demolished this month. "We have kept urban renewal informed of the progress of our fund-raising drive," he said, "and they have never indicated that they were dissatisfied with our progress."

More than $13,000, "and none of it has come from the city, state or federal sources," he said has been raised "from selling sand for slippery sidewalks to marketing 'Pierce for President' buttons."

He said if the group had $7,000 more the federal government would "follow through on its offer of three years ago to move the house" to a new site overlooking a pond in the city's historic area. He added the group "originally was told only financial responsibility was required" and the full amount for getting the house back to its 1842 appear-ance would not be needed before it was moved.

"If urban renewal tells us our resources aren't adequate, we'll keep on fighting," Yeaton said. "There was only one presiden from New Hampshire, and there's only one course for the Pierce Brigade."

Five Days Swell To Four Months; He Didn't Speak

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) -A Massachusetts youth, sentenced to five days in jail when he couldn't produce $25 to pay a fine, spent four months at the Adult Correctional Center because he didn't say anything. Richard Diamond, of Seekonk Mass., was sentenced in District Court last October for carrying a concealed weapon. After serving the five day sentence, he was to have been picked up by Seekonk police on a fugitive from justice charge in connection with a breaking and entering case. The situation, disclosed Mon day, was discovered by Judge Corrinne Grande, who produced a series of contradictory statements from police, prison and court officials about the "oversight." The judge also assailed the Seekonk police department for its "cavalier attitude," and was informed by an attorney that the attorneys general of Rhode Island and Massachusetts would be asked to investigate the Seekonk police.

The average yearly income in Mississippi is about $1,800.
