New Reorganization Bill Won't Reform Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — A low-key reorganization bill now nearly passed by the House of Representatives will not reform Congress by changing its structure and seniority.

A House Rules subcommittee, after months of hearings and executive sessions, may finish its draft of the measure next week. Then it faces a working over by the full committee and consideration by Congress itself.

"This is just reorganization, not reform," said Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., a subcommittee member who has called for a radical overhaul.

The bill, it was understood, does not touch the perennially criticized seniority system under which members of congressional committees advance to the powerful chairmanships on the length of service alone.

But sources said it does provide for Congress to use the latest electronic data processing gear to help it cope with the mountains of information involved in the lawmaking process.

Legislative research services, under its terms, would be greatly strengthened and a joint Senate-House committee on data processing set up.

Police Jail Protester Of Nude Movies

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — A young man distressed over sex movies flung a grave marker through the glass door of a downtown theater Thursday and was captured after a chase.

"I thought the tombstone would be symbolic of what pornography is doing to this country," Gene Watson, 24, told investigators and newsmen.

"I was very careful to make sure no one would be harmed," Watson said. "I was in the vicinity of the door—before I threw it."

It was a protest, he said, against "raw nudity" in films.

Police jailed Watson on charges of destroying private property and possession of a bomb.

A police department spokesman said the marker weighed about 40 pounds, was 14 inches long and had been taken from a baby's grave.

The X-rated "Last of the Mobile Hot Shots" is currently showing.

The attack was one of a recent series on theaters, including drive-ins, showing X-rated movies, usually "nudges."

Theaters showing the nude movies have had profane and filthy vandalism and have received warning notes and threats.

Steve Maskavich, assistant manager of the Hollywood, said Watson spoke with him about 30 minutes before the tombstone-throwing incident.

Maskavich quoted Watson as telling him: "If you don't stop showing X-rated movies in the next two or three days, I'm going to tear the place down. If you don't believe me, just look what happened to the other theaters."

Watson said he made no such threat. "I just left it to his imagination what I might do and what was in the case," he said.

The case contained a sack filled with powder, lighter fluid, a screwdriver and roofing tacks. Watson said he had no intention of using the combustible materials but carried them "to run a bluff."

Two young theater employees, a passerby, a patrolman and three other officers joined in the pursuit of Watson and capture at a nearby apartment house.

U.S. Cuts Troops, Leaves Its Installations in Turkey

ANKARA, (AP) — The United States has reduced its forces in Turkey from 23,000 to 7,000 men since 1965 and by June will have handed over to Turkey facilities worth $40-million.

Treasury Secretary Dan Rostenkowski said that since 1965, the year his Conservative party came to power, U.S. spy flights from Turkish bases over the Black Sea bordering the Soviet Union have not been allowed.

The disclosures came at a news conference called by Demirel to defend Turkey's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and agreements with the United States covering the presence of American facilities and personnel in Turkey.

Criticism of those ties has been building up in the press and among Turkish intellectuals in recent years.

Referring to the facilities built and used here by American personnel as "joint-use facilities," Demirel said they are entirely passive and defensive.

He said that under the terms of an agreement signed last July, Turkey has complete control over all American personnel on its soil and over the activities of all American personnel.

Demirel said that the United States has turned over or is in the process of turning over to Turkish armed forces two communications facilities outside Ankara and Istanbul, two radar stations on the Black Sea coast and a large strategic air base near Izmir on the Aegean Sea.

When the turnover is complete U.S. personnel in Turkey, excluding dependents, will number 6,000, he said.

These will be stationed at three large radar stations at Karaman in west Turkey, Turkey and a headquarters and logistics unit in Ankara.

The radar stations are to be used to monitor Russian air force, missile and space activities.

The Adana base has short-range tactical American aircraft loaded with nuclear weapons which can be used only if

Museum Director Seeks To Bring Art to People

By MILES A. SMITH (AP Arts Editor)

NEW YORK (AP) — John B. Hightower, who will become director of the Museum of Modern Art on May 1, is a young administrator with ideas about bringing art into everyday life.

He is 36, and few major museums have directors in their 30s.

As executive director of the New York State Council on the Arts, he presides over an organization which supports both the visual and the performing arts, and has a current annual budget of $2.5 million. In his new job he will have 500 employees and an operating budget of $6.5 million.

"I am interested in trying to take the arts out of their silken cocoons and relate them to the concerns of everyday life," he said in an interview.

"People think the arts can happen only in special places, it special moments, for special people," he declared.

The established arts institutions have been locked up and preoccupied with technique, with status, investment and real estate rather than with human connections.

"The trend of his thinking is illustrated by the fact that in the last three years the State Council has been sponsoring projects reaching into the disadvantaged areas.

These projects take about one-fourth of the budget, "but about 80 per cent of our staff time," said Hightower.

"In the ghetto areas, if the arts are to get to mean anything, they have to be relevant. What happens is that you get a street theater performance in which technique and polish are virtually nonexistent, but the content is compelling and immediate."

Hightower says he feels "art has to be considered as more than painting and sculpture. Films are accepted now as an art form, and the museum had something to do with that. Food design is another form. And I feel that environmental pollution—the whole business of destroying the environment—is as much an artistic concern as an economic one."

The museum's director-designate plans to serve mostly as an administrator, and to let the curatorial staff handle the artistic problems. His predecessor, Bates Lovley, who was ousted last spring, had taken on the additional duties of director of painting and sculpture.

Hightower has had no formal training in art history, the major in English literature at Yale) but does not let that bother him; he takes the position that there has been too much emphasis on history in the training of art administrators.

He likes music, says he "sang a lot in school," and collects recordings of early classical music.

"But what really turns me on are the visual arts," he said. "In terms of painters that means Matisse and Clifford Still, at favorites."

"Also I like the architecture of upstate New York, from the federal period to the high Victorian. Most of the population centers upstate had a lot of building

Raymond F. and Louis C. Damato proudly present their Newest Apartments

AND NOW, still another tasteful and outstanding accomplishment by Raymond F. and Louis C. Damato — "Contractors and Developers of Distinction!"

Town records show it as 28 Otis St., but we call it "The Mansion," the original and historic R. O. Cheney Homestead. Constructed in 1886 on a hill overlooking the family-owned Cheney Mills, it was the scene of many a gala ball and party.

Standing on two and a half acres of beautifully landscaped area, it provides a panoramic view of the Connecticut River Valley, including Glastonbury and Hartford.

During World War II, after it had been acquired by the late E. J. Holl, himself an epicure of fine living, "The Mansion" was converted into seven, executive-type apartments, unmatched in New England even today, providing for luxury living at its best.

Mr. Holl called it "The Pioneer House," and girls working at Pioneer Parachute, then in the Cheney Mills Company, lived there.

Now it has been refurbished and modernized, but its parquet flooring, wood-paneled walls, cathedral ceilings, walk-in closets and magnificent fireplaces remain unaltered. One of its seven apartments still has its three, working fireplaces.

Manchester's quality developers, Raymond F. and Louis C. Damato, have completely renovated the interior and exterior of the former R. O. Cheney estate, at 28 Otis St. However, they have left untouched the old-world look of the original construction, and the charm and elegance of the seven luxurious and cherished apartments retain all of their excellent qualities.

Great care was taken to preserve and to highlight the elaborate paneling and woodwork, virtually impossible to reproduce today.

By modernizing the kitchens and bathrooms, with the installation of easy-living appliances, the Damatos made certain that the apartments make for a happy combination of convenient living in an old-world atmosphere.

Ranging in size from two rooms to five, all but two of the apartments have fireplaces, and one even has three.

To complement the exterior of the house, extensive landscaping was done, and the grounds recall the gracious look of the estate at the turn of the century.

Twenty-eight Otis St., "The Mansion," marks the first time Raymond F. and Louis C. Damato have refurbished an older building, and they are proud of the result.

They are the developers and contractors of 23 new apartment buildings, including The Teresa Apartments at 1 Main St., in the North End Redevelopment Area. The first structure constructed in the renewal area, it was acknowledged "The first building in tomorrow's Manchester."

Their Sunny Brooke Village, on New State Rd., received the Chamber of Commerce City Beautiful Award. The Damatos received high praise and were cited "for creating a quality apartment complex on a previously unattractive site."

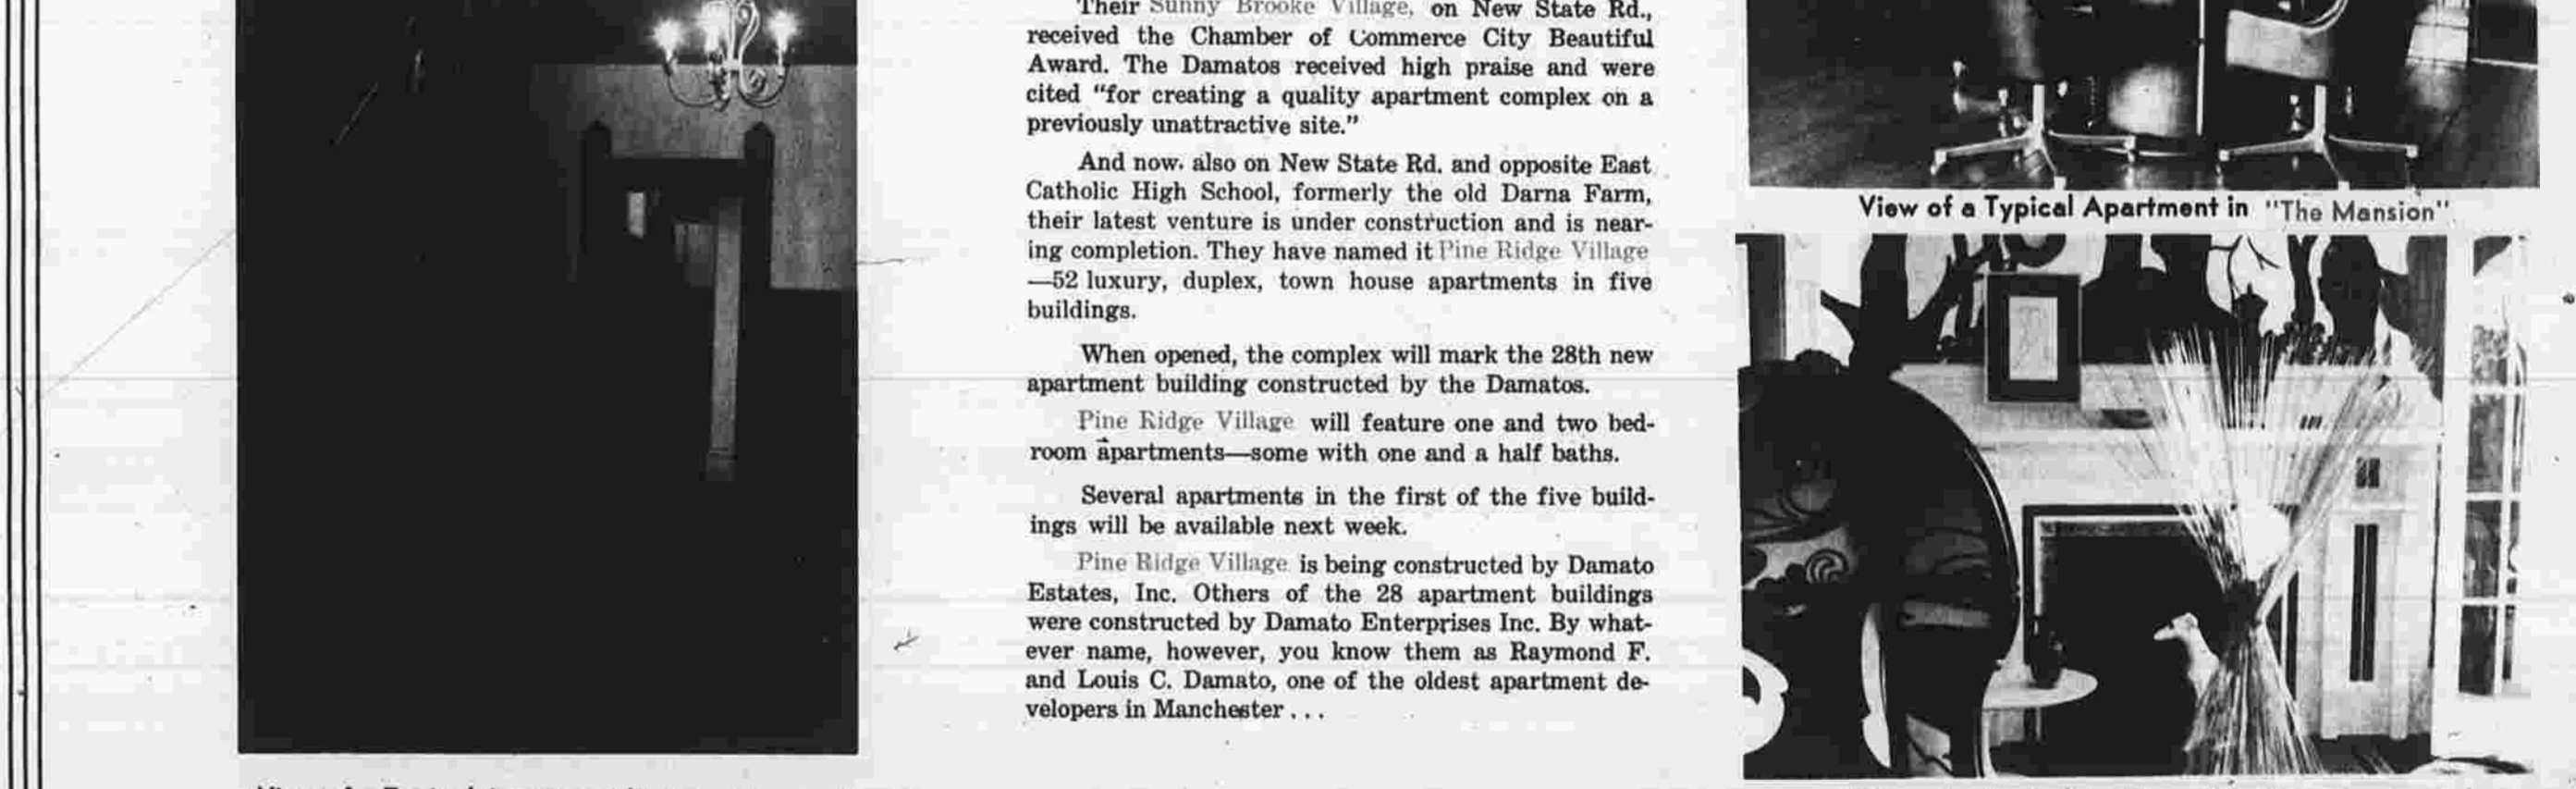

And now, also on New State Rd. and opposite East Catholic High School, formerly the old Dana Farm, their latest venture is under construction and is nearing completion. They have named it Pine Ridge Village — 52 luxury, duplex, town house apartments in five buildings.

When opened, the complex will mark the 28th new apartment building constructed by the Damatos.

Pine Ridge Village will feature one and two bedroom apartments—some with one and a half baths.

Several apartments in the first of the five buildings will be available next week.

Pine Ridge Village is being constructed by Damato Estates, Inc. Others of the 28 apartment buildings were constructed by Damato Enterprises Inc. By whatever name, however, you know them as Raymond F. and Louis C. Damato, one of the oldest apartment developers in Manchester...

World Still Needs Policing

We Americans are currently in the midst of a consensus admission, among ourselves, that we can't pretend to have the resource, power, and talent to "police the world."

This is primarily the result of our disappointing, disillusioning experience in Vietnam where, to put it bluntly, the world's greatest military power has found itself unable to establish a clear cut military victory over an enemy which never, at the most, has more than a few hundred thousand men in the field.

While we have been in the throes of our experience in Vietnam, we have been forced to recognize that this one involvement has reduced our military and political capacity to perform potential military volunteer police duties in other areas.

So now the fashionable thing to do, "foreign policy wise," is to shrug our national shoulders, confessing to ourselves that after all we can't police the whole world, and begin warning all our friends that they will have to depend upon themselves much more in the future.

As for Uncle Sam, this current sweet logic goes, he can easily keep himself busy at home, with all those tasks he has been neglecting while he has been trying so nobly to save mankind from itself.

What he might be spending on foreign police actions, he can now spend curing some of the social ills among his own people at home.

He can, perhaps, best lead the world by bringing the American promise to its fruition; perhaps our real service to the world, as well as our true duty to ourselves, lies in perfecting our own experiment. Perhaps we should look inward, rather than outward, for a long time to come.

Perhaps, in a sense, then, it is time for us to retire into our own borders and our own concerns, and shade our behavior toward that of isolationism.

The contrast between the way we have always been part of the repertoire of the instinctive, classic totalitarianism in the modern American scene.

What is new is that this same theme has now begun to come from erstwhile internationalists who are turning around in disillusionment over the specific experiences of Vietnam.

The contrast between so much potential waste of resources and life in Vietnam and so much potentially beneficial result of an equal effort on problems at home makes an appealing argument for a spell of concentration on our own affairs at home.

This is the trend of a great deal of our present public thinking. It has several very big things wrong with it.

The fact that the world isn't going to take policing from us doesn't mean that it doesn't need policing.

Before we proclaim ourselves justified in turning our backs on internationalism, we owe it to ourselves to define what kind of internationalism we have been practicing. We would then be forced to admit that our foreign policy has been much closer to imperialistic vigilance than to the principle of collective security.

Before we entered upon the failure of our individual effort at policing the world in Vietnam we had already committed an advance failure. This was our failure to place the problem of Vietnam within the jurisdiction — and the potential police power — of the United Nations.

By our current behavior, we seem likely by not only to discredit and discard our own effort at the role of world policeman, which is a role we should never have attempted, but also to discredit and discard the whole internationalist experiment of the United Nations, which has received little more than occasional lip service from any administration since that of Dwight Eisenhower.

Not to draw back out of the world, but to get into it in the right way — that should be this country's number one concern, for it concerns the survival of all countries and all experiments and all the dreams.

To Have Been The First Farmer

Our historians are in process of shifting the date and location of the first farmer.

Until recently, it has been generally assumed that the first fellow who put a seed in the ground, watched it come up, and took care of it until it produced something he could eat was a fellow who lived in the Near East over to the Tigris-Euphrates Valley about 8,000 years ago.

Now the discovery of seeds, implements, and crop remnants, all being dated by the modern radioactive carbon method at about 12,500 years ago, has moved the probable location of the first farmer out to the Near East over to the Far East, in what used to be known as the Tigris-Euphrates Valley about 8,000 years ago.

Some of the findings indicate that the ancient Thais, in addition to being ahead of their cousins in the Near East, were also ahead of those supposed Asian pioneers of civilization, the Chinese.

Such discoveries, such assignments of "firsts" are, of course, always subject to amendment and revision. There may be some ancient, somewhere underneath the Arctic ice cap, the bent over figure of the real first farmer, setting out the first pepper plant, maybe 20,000 years ago.

But perhaps we are not really interested in who was the first farmer in what country. Perhaps what we really keep re-echoing inside ourselves, as we move from one "first" to another, is our own private sense of what it must have been like to be the first human being to take hand to earth with seed and take hand back with yield.

Millions of us go through the ritual every spring, kneeling, full of faith and wonder, to renew the agriculture which began however many thousands of years ago, and each of us becomes, at such moment, petitioner for a miracle which, however often it has happened before, is also forever new.

But to have been the one who, for the very first time, united sun and soil and thought and seed and moisture and hand and plan in one grand and glorious scheme for making a particular plant grow, that must have been something!

The Pause That Refreshishes

We encounter an even dozen stop lights daily on our way to work, and on days when the wind sits gently in the shoulder of our sail and the law of averages is in operation, we can expect to get through about half those lights on green.

But the other morning we hit at least ten of the lights in that red enter-tainment while we were stopped, however, in watching the young lady in the car ahead who took advantage of every stop to add a few touches to her make-up.

It had a remarkable sense of timing. If the light she approached were green, she slowed down enough to let it turn yellow. Then she stopped at once, tilted the rear view mirror to reflect her own pretty face — it must have been pretty for all the paint that she took with it — and went to work.

Out came comb and lipstick. Up went the hands, smoothing, patting, pressing. Swift frontal strokes with the lipstick, lips lightened, then pursed. Head cocked appreciatively on one side, then turned to try to catch a semi-profile in the mirror.

When the light finally turned green, it took a while to restore the cosmetic paraphernalia to the handbag, readjust the mirror, and grope for the accelerator. By that time, useful seconds had passed, with the result that the next traffic light was sure to be red, and the same ritual was repeated, not necessarily in its full dimension, but at least to the extent of a touch-up with the comb, a twisting of a curl, or a reasserting of the hair.

Before we proclaim ourselves justified in turning our backs on internationalism, we owe it to ourselves to define what kind of internationalism we have been practicing. We would then be forced to admit that our foreign policy has been much closer to imperialistic vigilance than to the principle of collective security.

Before we entered upon the failure of our individual effort at policing the world in Vietnam we had already committed an advance failure. This was our failure to place the problem of Vietnam within the jurisdiction — and the potential police power — of the United Nations.

By our current behavior, we seem likely by not only to discredit and discard our own effort at the role of world policeman, which is a role we should never have attempted, but also to discredit and discard the whole internationalist experiment of the United Nations, which has received little more than occasional lip service from any administration since that of Dwight Eisenhower.

Not to draw back out of the world, but to get into it in the right way — that should be this country's number one concern, for it concerns the survival of all countries and all experiments and all the dreams.

To Have Been The First Farmer

Our historians are in process of shifting the date and location of the first farmer.

Until recently, it has been generally assumed that the first fellow who put a seed in the ground, watched it come up, and took care of it until it produced something he could eat was a fellow who lived in the Near East over to the Tigris-Euphrates Valley about 8,000 years ago.

Now the discovery of seeds, implements, and crop remnants, all being dated by the modern radioactive carbon method at about 12,500 years ago, has moved the probable location of the first farmer out to the Near East over to the Far East, in what used to be known as the Tigris-Euphrates Valley about 8,000 years ago.

Some of the findings indicate that the ancient Thais, in addition to being ahead of their cousins in the Near East, were also ahead of those supposed Asian pioneers of civilization, the Chinese.

Such discoveries, such assignments of "firsts" are, of course, always subject to amendment and revision. There may be some ancient, somewhere underneath the Arctic ice cap, the bent over figure of the real first farmer, setting out the first pepper plant, maybe 20,000 years ago.

But perhaps we are not really interested in who was the first farmer in what country. Perhaps what we really keep re-echoing inside ourselves, as we move from one "first" to another, is our own private sense of what it must have been like to be the first human being to take hand to earth with seed and take hand back with yield.

Millions of us go through the ritual every spring, kneeling, full of faith and wonder, to renew the agriculture which began however many thousands of years ago, and each of us becomes, at such moment, petitioner for a miracle which, however often it has happened before, is also forever new.

But to have been the one who, for the very first time, united sun and soil and thought and seed and moisture and hand and plan in one grand and glorious scheme for making a particular plant grow, that must have been something!

The Pause That Refreshishes

Wonders of the Universe: A Cook for the Astronauts

By DR. I.M. LEVITT, DIRECTOR The Fels Planetarium

One suggestion has been to provide them with familiar foods. It has even been suggested that we find out what the astronauts' eats at home by choice. Providing Mrs. Astronaut's cake to the mission might resolve one of the major problems.

Another food problem lies with the preparation. Scientists have studied the problem of increasing the astronaut's work, output by the use of a cook to prepare and serve the food. In the case of three astronauts on a 48-hour weekly work schedule, one cook replacing one astronaut would jump the working period to approximately 10 hours per week.

While the average man spends about two hours a day eating, an Apollo astronaut spends about 1 1/2 hours per meal. With four meals per day, the astronaut spends six hours a day preparing and eating his food. Thus the addition of a cook would increase their productivity to a point where the addition is beneficial.

In a lunar colony a cook will become a necessity, freeing the astronaut to perform their tasks over extended periods and providing an incentive to eat so that their physical condition does not deteriorate.

What we might look for in time are female astronauts, with modest weights, who are experts at cooking. These cooks could prepare the tasty, desirable meals prepared for them and the Apollo astronauts could select their food from a menu provided for them. These foods were then packaged and the astronauts ate the food which they had previously selected. In all these cases the result was that the astronaut did not eat the complete meal and lost weight — and not just water but actually body tissue.

Why should our astronauts lose weight? Why should the Soviet cosmonauts lose weight? It appears that the astronaut is not eating enough because the food is unfamiliar to them and it is too much trouble to prepare.

This may persist until we develop a prepared food dispenser, something equivalent to a waiter instantly providing the food orders. This could circumvent one possible source of appetite loss, since preparing one's food does not enhance the appetite. Women often comment on the better taste of restaurant meals as a reaction directly a due to their not having to prepare the meal and despite the fact that their home meals might be superior in quality, taste and appeal.

Nutritionists concerned with food problems for astronauts indicate that tastes differ. Even in a normal family there are substantial differences in food likes and dislikes. Similarly, most astronauts did not eat all the foods making up a single meal, selecting only favorites and ignoring or discarding others. As a consequence, the astronaut ate an inadequate diet with a resulting weight loss. The rejection of some foods also led to an unbalanced diet for only by eating all the foods in each meal was the diet nutritionally adequate.

The astronaut food may be considered institutional food and the nutritionist point out that institutional food is acceptable only when confinement, as in a prison, makes meals a matter of interest in the day. Students and military personnel often complain because of their food. They have other interests. While the astronaut is confined, they are highly motivated and thus may actually prefer to eat, though they will not complain because food is secondary to other objectives. But if their diet remains inadequate, in time their work efficiency must drop. No steps must be taken to insure them a proper diet both in bulk and content.

Our space program has been subject to censure because of the lack of female astronauts. One way the solution to this criticism would be to use a woman as a cook, nutritional and medical assistant to take care of the astronauts. A female M.D. might satisfy everyone.

The first food eaten in space by an American astronaut was by Col. John Glenn who was in orbit for slightly less than two days. He ate some puréed applesauce from a tube. By the time Mercury 9 went into orbit for a 34-hour stay, some food had been prepared in bite-sized pieces together with other food which had to be hydrated. The Gemini crews had rather complex meals prepared for them and the Apollo astronauts could select their food from a menu provided for them. These foods were then packaged and the astronauts ate the food which they had previously selected. In all these cases the result was that the astronaut did not eat the complete meal and lost weight — and not just water but actually body tissue.

Courtroom Outbursts: Bar Association To Study Ways to Deal with Disruption

By BOB MONROE, Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When defendants interrupt their trial with loud protests, jeers and obscenities, what can the judge do to maintain order in the courtroom? Recent courtroom disturbances in New York and Chicago have brought this legal question into the spotlight.

In the "Chicago Eight" conspiracy trial, federal Judge Julius J. Hoffman ordered Black Panther leader Bobby Seale chained and gagged after he continually abused the court's right to represent himself.

Hoffman later sentenced Seale to four years in prison for contempt of court. He also revoked the bail of David R. Dellinger, another defendant, who shouted an obscenity. Dellinger was jailed Wednesday.

In the New York bomb-omnibus trial of 13 Black Panther state Supreme Court Justice John M. Murphy sentenced a woman spectator to 30 days in jail for contempt after she burst through a metal barrier and touched off a melee between defendants and court officers.

As a trial judge tries to be patient and keep calm, he must keep in mind that severe disciplinary measures could be taken if a mistrial is declared. The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last summer overturned a conviction because an unruly defendant had been removed from the courtroom.

During the trial of self-styled revolutionaries who scorn traditional courtroom procedure, the judge faces his most severe test.

"What it comes down to is these people are saying that this is part of an unjust system, whatever it is, and they are not going to be law, it's going to be lynching," one observer said.

In the past, the judge has been a judge, bar officials, lawyers and law school professors, disapproved the measures advanced by the federal justice said such reforms would help "restore state supreme courts to their rightful place in the sun as the primary arbiters of the state cases."

Burger said prisoners' federal court petitions to habeas corpus usually are without merit. He said that people who are in custody, "an undue burden" on federal courts and have been heard, if not granted, in federal-state relationships.

Therefore, to reduce the flood of federal-state cases to a small stream, "it recommends adoption of state procedure by which every person in confinement who has, or who thinks he has, a grievance or a complaint, can be heard promptly, fairly and fully."

He said "if this is done properly, one hearing will very likely dispose of the matter."

The chief justice urged the attorney general to establish guidelines for judges to deal with outbursts and hopes to make recommendations in a "matter of months."

Courts traditionally have had the power of summary contempt, which was used by Judge Hoffman to jail Seale. It also was used in 1969 conspiracy trial of 11 U.S. Communist party leaders before then-U.S. Dist. Court Judge Harold R. Medina, who sentenced five of the defendants for contempt and after the trial sent six defendants to jail for up to six months.

But contempt should be a last resort, says Ronald Goldman, a Washington lawyer who wrote "The Contempt Power" and is considered an expert on the subject.

"Judges ought to use all their power to avoid the use of contempt," he said.

Journey Into Truth

If you have been with us the past five days on our Journey into Truth, we hope the challenge to make of Lent a spiritual quest through the use of the latest chapters of the Gospels, which as suggested in previous days should reveal that the suffering, sorrow, shame and death of Christ, speak of experiences with varying degrees found in our environment and that these are the consequences of sin.

There are those who question the validity of sin being a part of man's nature. Ignoring his depravity, we are asked, "Are we not all the children of God? Do we not bear His image?" It has been said that man still bears the image of God, like the brand new Cadillac which went over the cliff. It was still a Cadillac at the bottom of the cliff, but it also bore the marks of the fall.

Man does need saving and a salvaging, and this is what the death and resurrection of Christ are all about. Frankly, if Christ is not the answer, there is no answer. But Christ is the answer. He was the answer to the initial failure when, as early as Genesis 3:15, we read: "The seed of the woman will bruise the head of the serpent." Later in the Hebrew economy God revealed the coming Christ as the answer through the prophets. (Read Isaiah 53.) Today it is risen Christ, by His Holy Spirit, is experientially available to those who believe. The name Jesus that brought our Lord Jesus from the dead will make alive the man dead in sin and trespasses, make him a new creature. (See 2 Corinthians 5:17.)

He has made his fortune; he has built his business reputation; he has energy left over to indulge an old ambition; it is not too difficult finding a party which, in some this year, is even eager to let him in.

The Republicans did well enough with two such candidates. Present Bush and Bill Purlert for the Senate, but lost with Paul Cornell and Clayton Gougeon. The outstanding example of businessmen turned successful politician for the Democrats has been Chester Bowles, but he had developed eight

The other day we noted that, in our somewhat extensive time of observing Connecticut politics, only two gentlemen from the academic world, Cross of Yale, and McConaughy of Wesleyan, ever got themselves elected Governor of the State of Connecticut. Of all the other potential academic candidates which were talked about, and sometimes half-launched during this period, none ever really crystallized.

We looked at the past, we concluded that any wise college president choosing the present political situation in Connecticut would know, without being told, that many are rumored to be fun helping him spend his money for the nomination or, in event of a nomination, helping him make up his mind what to do with the money.

This may leave Blair, as his greatest extra-political distinction, that famous role as part of the muscled skill which helped force an undefeated football team for Yale. There is muscle in politics, too, but it is not very often transferred directly from football success or business success to the political arena. The soundest preparation for politics is politics.

LINCOLN and ALLEGIANCE

Abraham Lincoln in 1860.

PATRIOTS YOUR COUNTRY NEEDS YOU!

Wanted--25 Men

To fill the ranks of the "INDIANA SNAKE KILLERS," in Colonel Scribner's Regiment at Camp Noble, New Albany.

Enquire of JOHN SEXTON, Captain, JOHN CURRY, 1st Lieutenant, G. W. WINDELL, 2d Lieutenant, Camp Noble, Aug. 30th, 1861.

Civil War recruiting poster from New Albany.

Preservation of the Union was the prime concern of President Lincoln. And he had to try to maintain it in the face of the most divisive conflict which can assail a nation—civil war.

He delayed the Emancipation Proclamation for two years, hoping that some solution could still be found, even after the actual outbreak of the war, and he continued to search for ways of bringing about peace.

The Oath of Allegiance (right), published here for the first time, was issued by Lincoln's Administration for use during the Civil War. It was specially worded to counteract "any ordinance, resolution, or law of any State Convention, or Legislature" (such as that shown in the lower left-hand corner of the page). The document is from the U.S. Customs Documents collection of Mr. Ernest L. Chamber of New York City. The oath was sworn before a collector of Customs. Customs was the main income of the government till the Civil War.

OATH OF ALLEGIANCE

SUPPORT THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

District and Port of Alexandria.
D. H. Prunk do solemnly swear that I will support, protect, and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith, allegiance and loyalty to the same, any ordinance, resolution, or law of any State Convention, or Legislature, to the contrary notwithstanding; and further, that I do this with a full determination, pledge, and purpose, without any mental reservation or evasion whatsoever; and further, that I will well and faithfully perform all the duties which may be required of me by law. So help me God.

Dep Collector

EXTRA CHARLESTON MERCURY

Passed unanimously at 11:35 o'clock, P. M., December 20th, 1860.

AN ORDINANCE
To dissolve the Union between the State of South Carolina and other States united with her under the compact entitled "The Constitution of the United States of America."

THE UNION IS DISSOLVED!

South Carolina leads the secession from the Union.

April 1861. Firing on Fort Sumter, S. Carolina, began the Civil War. General Pierre Gustave Toutant Beauregard (right) was commander of the Confederate forces in the attack on Fort Sumter.

State Schools

Now Offering Black Studies
By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
College students across the nation last year began to study black studies programs. In Connecticut, the plan was announced in a letter by the state secretary of education, one of the first in the nation to do so.

Students enrolled at the Hartford Seminary Foundation, the Graduate College of St. Joseph College, Trinity College and the University of Hartford may take courses in the field of black studies.

Moroccan Official, Rogers Talk Arms

RABAT, Morocco, (AP) - Western monarch, King Hassan II, in the Mediterranean area, Africa and the Arab world. The secretary of state delivered a letter from President Nixon inviting King Hassan to visit the United States this week.

Rogers had a 15-minute private talk with the king prior to a luncheon hosted by Hassan in a downtown Rabat hotel.

Moroccan commitment to the Arab cause and U.S. support for Israel was considered the reason for the Moroccan visit.

Rogers and his wife were treated to a colorful welcome through the 1,000-year-old ancient religious capital 120 miles north of Rabat.

Higher-Ups Triggered Calley Arrest

Col. Robert M. Lathrop told a pretrial hearing on defense motions that a sworn statement pertaining to the case was forwarded to him by the army inspector general's office.

General Lathrop said he never received any information in preparing charges against Calley.

Calley, 28, is charged with murdering 102 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai March 16, 1968.

Calley was called as a witness on a defense motion which alleges that command influence was brought to bear in the decision to try Calley on the charges.

Lathrop said he discussed the case with the Judge Advocate General's office in Washington and was told "do not disclose the nature of the statement."

One of those taking part in the My Lai action was Paul J. Meadlo, 22, of Terre Haute, Ind. He was quoted in an interview broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System's radio network as saying Calley told him, "You know what to do with them, 'don't you' referring to some Vietnamese prisoners."

Meadlo said in the interview that he replied "Yes. So I took it for granted he just wanted us to watch them. And he left and came back about 10-15 minutes later and said 'How come you ain't killed them yet?'"

"I went to the office of the Judge Advocate General at Washington for assistance in drafting specifications, and those specifications were sent to the student brigade in the event they saw fit to press charges," Lathrop said.

Calley was assigned to the student brigade at Ft. Benning at the time.

Lathrop said he received a telephone call from a Col. Wilbur.

Wilbur's standing is very good," he said. "Our relations with Congress—and I say this rather timidly—are good. I like to think that our relations with the press are good. And I think the policies formulated by President Nixon have been well received."

Americans Have Been Fed Beef from Diseased Cattle

WASHINGTON (AP) - anatomically different, say agricultural department experts, year six millions of pounds of beef from cattle that had "cancer eye" or similar tumorous disorders.

But last week Dr. Jesse L. Steinfeld, U.S. surgeon general, told the Agriculture Department that quality inspectors say a localized tumor on the eye of a cow poses no threat to the rest of the carcass.

Steinfeld said the animal's head is condemned, experts say, the public can be assured that the hamburger and roasts elsewhere in the carcass are safe to eat.

Medicare Payments Total Million Dollars at Clinics

WASHINGTON (AP) - Doctors at two clinics in Texas and California received Medicare payments totaling about $1 million for each patient in a single year, a Senate report says.

A top official of the American Medical Association was among the doctors at one of the clinics at Palo Alto, Calif.

The Scott and White Clinic at Temple, Tex., received $1.2 million in Medicare payments for its 107 doctors in 1968 for the largest group billing listed under Medicare.

The Palo Alto Medical Clinic got $925,000 the same year for 120 doctors. Dr. Richard S. Wilbur, who is now the AMA's second-highest staff official, was a partner in the Palo Alto clinic at that time.

The AMA was a fierce foe of Medicare when it was passed in 1965, rather than the federal health program for the elderly.

The Senate Finance Committee staff report kept the names secret and listed the doctors and clinic groups only by confidential code numbers, such as "YY2687Y."

However, the clinics were identified by The Associated Press through government sources and official records.

John Gill, administrator of the Scott and White Clinic, said in a telephone interview that the $1.2 million covered work by 107 physicians who are paid fixed salaries rather than on a fee-for-service basis.

The Texas clinic, founded in 1923, is the country's largest frontier railroad hospital center, is now one of the largest in the country.

The Palo Alto Clinic also received $205,509 through Medicare in the same year for a total of $1.2 million from the government programs. Most of its 130 doctors serve the medical faculty at Stanford University.

Glcs, Cong in Four-Day Battle

SAIGON (AP) - South Vietnamese spokesmen said today that U.S. and government forces have killed at least 117 North Vietnamese and captured six in a four-day battle still going on in the western Mekong Delta's plain of Reeds.

The battle in the savanna land-dry at this time of year—was the only sustained major fighting reported during the Viet Cong's four-day Tet cease fire which ended at 7 a.m. today.

The fighting began when an American helicopter was fired on Friday. Government mercenaries led by U.S. Special Forces made a helicopter assault into the area, about eight miles southwest of Moc Hoa and 60 miles west of Saigon, and touched off a succession of running fights.

Field reports said about 10 government troops had been killed and a dozen wounded. The Viet Cong's losses were not reported.
