Our Commitment By Proxy The most alarming flaw in the White House version of the Cambodian operation is illustrated by the announcement from Vice President Ky of South Vietnam that the new government in Cam-nam itself.

What this would mean, to take it literally, and express it ironically, would be that the same South Vietnamese forces which only a few weeks ago were being evaluated nervously to see whether they would have a chance of standing up for themselves if American troops should ever leave South Vietnam have now suddenly become capable of taking on the policing of another country in addition possibility that, if the South Vietnames army is to extend its own responsibilities over into Cambodia, that means it is going to be spread thinner back in South Vietnam, which would mean, in turn, that there may have to be increased care and deliberation in the withdrawal of American troops.

Yesterday, no one was sure the South letnamese could protect their own ountry. That makes it difficult, today, to assume they can suddenly provide security for two countries. We assume, more and more, that the real original reason for our own venture into Cambodia was to prevent the fall of the new government there. That function will soon be handed over to the South Vietnamese land forces, with the assistance of American air power. But the civil war that can be expected to develop against the new Cambodian government has not yet even begun to show itself. The sharp question -whether to let the Cambodian government fall when that civil war does show its strength is almost certain to be presented to that government's guarantors, South Vietnam and the United States, at a later moment when the cost of the answer may be higher than any scale of operations now being discussed.

There is a chance that the Cambodian story has barely begun, and such a sobering prospect is enough to make us all wish we had never gone in there, not

But there has never been anything simple or uncomplicated about any phase of this involvement in Southeast Asia. There has never been a good simple answer. And all those of us who have crossed into Cambodia need to do to cause our own feeling to waver is to ask ourselves one question, which is: Should we have done nothing and let the new Cambodian government be over-

Probably the real answer is that, either way, with us staying out or going in, the story of Cambodia from now on would have been what it is now going to be, which is that of another full theater for the war to be waged in. In a glib sense, that is the story of the whole war, a story of actions producing, over and over and over, the results they were supposed to prevent. Our commitment Cambodia by proxy increases out commitment to our proxy, not within any limit we ourselves can set, but up to whatever it takes.

But the more generally accepted explanation of what seems a continuing resurgence of home vegetable gardening in 1970 is that, in times of economic instability, more and more families think of saving themselves a little money by growing their own vegetables, and getting a little healthful exercise in the bargain.

Whatever the explanation, sales of seeds are up from 10 to 15 per cent this year, following a climb of 10 per cent last year. The indication is that a higher percentage of Americans are gardening today than at any time since the victory gardens of World War II.

Some of the wistful dreams of these new or returning gardeners are certain to be realized.

The Street Width Problem The City Plan Commission will soon have a plan presented to it which will ogically maintain that a street serving a small number of houses should no have to be as wide as a street servin as an arterial within a sub-division, Cu rently only one street width is allowed except under planned residential de-

Because the whole question bears so heavily on the continuance of PRD zoning in the city, the City Plan Com mission would probably be wise to wait before making any changes in PRD reuirements until the whole picture in the city can be considered together. Th City Plan professional staff expects to have this study pulled together by nex

PRD depends upon using land in new ways — devoting less of it to common spaces such as parks and jointly used and maintained areas. Because street work is one of the more expensive as pects of any development, major changes would remove many of the reasons while a PRD is economically feasible, and why public spaces can be want to live in a PRD, but the system is ecognized nationally as a new and better way to conserve land and provid more housing and recreation for the money than other systems.

By adopting the program, Middletown has become a national leader. The current criticism has probably come about ecause of the width of some of the streets serving some of the houses at Vesleyan Hills. But while it is possible o argue that the future city standard should be two or more feet wider, and i is a matter of opinion, it has to be realized that unless the developer has an economic incentive to go PRD, the whole concept will die. Even if PRD and regular developments have the same street width requirements, it is possible that developers will opt for the simplest program which is a regular develop-

So while the City Plan Commission is learly on the right track looking at general street widths, and can afford to refuce some of them where a smaller usage is involved, it would be a pity to liminate PRD with a back-door change of this nature. PRD helps a city because provides free park space, can reduce requirement for school crossing ruards, and adds to the variety of hous ng available. Some very sophisticated adgments are involved here, and w rould hope that the City Pian Commission will wisely balance economic feasiility with the public good. Merely sayng that all the streets in the city should the same width would not meet such a criterion. MIDDLETOWN PRESS.

From Your Neighbor's Kitchen

Almost a year ago, Barbara Riegel organized a gourmet group. Four couples meet about once every two months in their homes. Each couple brings some portion of the meal. Everyone except the host contributes to the wine selection. The four women have an occasional evening meeting. At each gathering, they choose menus for two dinners and set dates. Like most groups of this type, menus have centered about particular countries or ethnic backgrounds. Barbara uncovered a marvelous Danish recipe for pork loin. The accompanying sauce is a sensation. Pepitone Stuns Home Town Gang

HOUSTON (AP) - Joe Pepitone stunned the gang from his old home town Wednesday with a fourth inning grand slam homer to gain the Houston Astros a 5-3 victory over the Mets from New York. Pepitone, a Brooklyn boy and former New York Yankee, drilled his first National League grand slammer into the right eld seats after Mets pitcher Nolan Ryan had filled the bases and forced in one run on a walk. After rounding the bases Pepine leaped exultantly on home plate with both feet. It was his second night in a row as leadoff batter in the Astros' lineup and the first baseman says he now likes it. "When I saw my name there. I thought the lineup was upside down," Pepitonee said, "but afttonight, I want to stay former Yankee manager and
