son right, as it should serve any politician right, to lose the election he staged just because the public opinion polls showed him in a favorable position. And the prominent, dramatic spectacle of the British Labor leader losing office and power he might otherwise have retained should do something, for a time at least, to cool down the idea happen to be tilted one way or the other. It is still the official outcome, at the official voting polls, which counts. Unfortunately, one can never be quite sure that official verdict is not being influenced and contorted by the published findings of the public opinion pollsters. Had there been no polls, and had Prime Minister Wilson merely felt it in his political bones that now was a good time to hold his election, might he have saved whatever strength he had accumulated for that actual election? Was the But wait, you say. Most of these examples are old ones. A new Administrafact that he was made to seem such an easy front runner at least partially responsible for the fact that he came in second? rules of the new arena. Well, the way British Labor was burn-

. . . an election, is going to make politicians for a time at least. And we Americans are entitled to form our own evaluations of our own administrations, and not bound to take it as some sort of holy writ whatever the latest poll pronouncement says about our rating for one lead-There is more than one reason, however, why any discrediting of the public opinion polls is good news. The business of calling the outcome of elections is, after all, a kind of game, in which politicians, pollsters and voters can all play, with the voters themselves always capable of making the last big play. The more pernicious and insidious influence of the pollsters derives from their claim, not to predict the outcome of any particular election, but to able to more non-thought and panic reaction" advise the political candidate on what than he had ever seen. his public is thinking and feeling about various public issues. The polisters can be just as far from the real truth in their surveys on public issues as they can when they are 12 points away from the result in a particular election. And candidates who consult the pollsters, as the soothsayers issue is likely to prove most popular, are guilty of a cheap and irresponsible betrayal of their own duty and welfare as a seeker of the public trust. In addition, the polls can be wrong. Why can the polls be wrong? Because, in our opinion, they have not yet perfected their own techniques for distinguishing between what may often be a trial answer in which the subject himself is trying out something to see how it sounds and the final answer that has specific lever in a voting booth. That, we suspect, is the flaw -that the pollsters do not get the real answers. The Argentine Way

One cannot withhold a certain admiration from the Argentine system, as illustrated in the ceremonial inauguration of a new president the other day.

The new president, a general in the Argentine army, had never been nominated for the office, or made a speech in quest of the office, or been voted for by anybody.

How he got where he was was illustrated by the way the ceremony was top aides again and again appeared to peak first and think later. In the early nonths, for example, Mr. Nixon and other key officials constantly boasted of their plan to reshape domestic programs so as to put far more emphasis on early childhood development; this was to be a top-priority goal of the new Administration. But they failed to put anyone in charge of this work for more than a year, with the result that practically othing has yet happened on this alleg-. . .

On taking office, the President's men hailed as near-perfect their proposed White House staff arrangements. Since then, it has gone through two major reorganizations and a dozen minor ones. and the odds are that the big reshuffle nnounced last week won't eliminate snarls and snafus much better than the previous structures did. There are nov so many counselors at the White House one staff man remarks, that "we're thinking of opening a summer camp."

With considerable fanfare, chart talks and editorial briefings around the country, the Administration last August presented a bold new welfare plan. Then it developed that the planners had failed to whether the new program would be in addition to, or instead of, food stamps It took two months to prepare a specific bill for Congress, and many more months for other details to be worked

Late in April, President Nixon told White House that he planned to address the nation soon on the state of th economy; some of them said he had promised the speech within two weeks That address was finally given yester day, seven weeks later; in the meantime, uncertainty and unease had mounted in the business and financial communities as the President's advisers publicly anguished over just how far the speech should go in proposing wage and

And what about the newest wrinkle on the controversial family assistance program? The Senate Finance Committee omplained of lack of coordination with such other Federal welfare programs as Medicaid and low-income housing, To meet at least part of this objection, the White House now promises to ask Congress early next year to approve a broad new health insurance program covering six to seven million needy families. Only the general outline is ready so far; debe worked out in coming

Yet if the details aren't yet worked out, how does the Administration know it can really be done efficiently, just wha families should be covered, how much it may cost? That's when CBS became cational television's biggest hit, more aggressive in shows for It combines animation and live kids, and the other networks folaction to teach the alphabet and lowed suit. Alas, in the battle for ratings the shows became more and more violent. Filmacartoon version of "Superman." which Scheimer described as "the least maligned of the action shows."

With the killings of Martin Lusion against violence, the networks scrambled to tone down the violence.

"Fortunately, we were sitting with a property in the new mold —'Archie' " said Prescott, "It ny grew so fast that it was became the most successful wooed for a merger by several show on Saturday morning. And acquistive corporations. Filma- I'm sure we never would have antiviolence wave."

Not only did Filmation hit the The quick rise of Filmation It also spawned a music enterjackpot with the "Archie" show, prise for the company, including a record, "Sugar, Sugar," which reportedly sold six million copies worldwide. Next season Filmation will have two other shows on the networks: "The Jerry Lewis

Sheriff in Ad To Join Series

NEW YORK (AP) - It is rare when a character in a TV commercial is such a hit that it can be transferred to the entertainment portion of an hour. However, Joe Higgins, who has been playing a comedy sheriff in a series of automobile commercials, has been signed as a regular on the Everly Brothers show which, starting on July 8, will be Johnny Cash's summer play the same character of the commercials except that he will early today 137 persons had been arrested in 10 cities a part of Operation Eagle, th code name for a six-month un dercover investigation that cul minated in weekend raid across the nation.

Two of those arrested were critically wounded by federa agents—one in New York, the other in Miami. While personally disclosing developments at a swiftly called news conference Sunday, Mitch ell gave much of the credit for Operation Eagle to legal wire tap provisions. He also pointed to the shoot ing incidents as fresh support for his stand that Congress ahould pass President Nixon's anticrime proposal providing no-knock entry. "It would have been a great help to us," he said. The attorney general said the two wounded men were among three men who "resisted when agents announced their presence." Agents shot one man in his home after they said he aimed his weapon at them. The

State-V For S

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) The Republican Party of Connecticut is going to have a chance to find out what will be the effects of a state-wide primary, a type of fight which both political parties have successfully avoided up to this year.

Congressman Lowell P. Weicker Jr., the party-endorsed candidate for U.S. Senator, faces a certain primary challenge from State Sen. John M. Lupton, who has supported a direct primary system for many years.

Also possible is a primary fight for the nomination for governor, which Congressman Thomas J. Meskill won at the state convention Saturday, State Sen. Wallace Barnes mustered the 20 per cent of the delegates
