Cambodia Plus Kent

agree with some hunch of your own. tremendously impressed by the findings of the Urban Research Corporation, a private research group, about what happened on the American campus in the first week of May. By the findings of the Urban Researchers, the first three days of May, following President Nixon's announcement of our move into Cambodia, saw student strikes and protests hitting the campuses at the rate of about 20 a day. When, on the fourth day of May, the at Kent State, campus protests rose to more than 100 a day. "In spite of Cambodia," said John Naisbitt, president of Urban Research-killing of four white students occurred ers, "without the Kent State deaths, there would have been no national student strike." On the other hand, when the wave of student protest had begun to ebb, a new killing on the campus, that of two black students at Jackson State, did nothing in particular to stir up the campuses "The evidence is clear," said Naisbitt, "that the deaths of four white stu-under similar circumstances had little effect on an essentially white national student strike." Urban Research concluded that more students than ever before were involved in the May demonstrations, and that there was, in particular, a marked increase in the number of "moderate" students participating. What the survey by Urban Research shows, as its main conclusion, is that it was the collision between two dramtic events in that first week of May, the invasion of a new country in Southeast Asia, and the sudden discovery that things had progressed in this country to the point where we could shoot down our own children on their campus, which produced a sudden and unprecedented surge of protest, not only on the campuses, but in the minds and hearts of millions of Americans

These millions of Americans had for a moment or two at least, but one single thought. It was that perhaps the time had come for all of us to take a real look at where we were heading. Somewhere between the hypocrisy of high leadership and the vengeful savagery of nihilistic anarchy there must be something -- middle America wants to strengthen and preserve.

Underestimating The Voters The political experts, and all the rest of us as well, are continually underestimating the intelligence and taste of this or that sector of the American elec-

It was conceded, therefore, that as long as he ran the voters of his particular constituency would never reject the candidacy of Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, the master demagogue. And if it wasn't openly conceded, it was at least feared and expected that, if 'the were left to the registered Democrats of Connecticut, they would not be influenced by the circumstances which had led his colleagues in the Senate to

In the actual test ,the enrolled Democratic voters of the city of Stamford rejected Dodd, by a vote of three to one, and thus gave the urgent political signal for him to retire, and the primary voters in Congressman Powell's district refused, although by a narrow margin, to renominate him. These two defeats leave, as the most prominent surviving instance of a candidate who is being presumed to be unbeatable, no matter what he has or has not done, Senator Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts. It may be too much to expect that the voters of Massachusetts will suddenly advance to the state of enlightenment of voters in Stamford and Harlem. But the truth is, these days, as Britain has just discovered for itself, that nothing is so likely to be overturned as the election result which is conceded beforehand.

Tough Campus Discipline which is really serious about controlling its student revolutionaries. It specializes in giving them stiff courses in patriotism at an early age. It accuses wayward students of playing the game of their country's enemies. particularly those enemies who want to tear down their own best standards. It calls openly for the "liquidation" of "bad elements" who "fan the wind of criminal opposition among the youth."

Whenever it finds its students getting

But, although this sounds like a coun try some Americans disgusted with the permissive laxity on American campuses would like to go to, it isn't such a country in reality. It is Communist China.

pose without stimulating a diversity That is why every attempt to deny our diversity, to smother partisanship in an morphous cloud of consensus, is doomed to failure. It confuses the ends with the means. United we stand in love of country, in desire for peace and progress-but divided we stand in approach, in style, in policy to reach the ends we iew; irrational dissent considers crit cism of its point of view to be an attack on the right to dissentm Rational dissenters, in the tradition of Holmes and Brandesi, have never been more needed than they are today. They are with us, but their ideas are too often ignored-not by the majority, but by the emotionaries, a relatively small group of anti-intellectuals that has snatched the standard of dissent from their hands. Some of the rational dissenters I have been meeting with recently have pointed out that the emotionaries are not limit ed to their side. This is true. But we cannot abandon the public forum to the versus the anti-antis. We cannot refrain from speaking out in the voice of reason, both in affirmation and in dissent, for fear of becoming indentified with the emotionaries of the extremes. That, of course, brings me to the next slogan, the new favorite of editorial writers of all shades of opinion: "Let's de-escalate the rhetoric."

I think the word "rhetoric" is being badly misused. It is being defined as vituperation, as poisonous invective. Bu rhetoric is not that at all: Rhetoric is the use of public discourse to persuade. We do not have to depress that kind of hetoric at all; on the contrary, we have o elevate the rhetoric. This does not mean that affirmers or dissenters have to color their speeches gray. It does not mean use we dwell on abstractions and totally refuse to engage in personalities. Our history is . rich in anecdote about the cut and thrust of partisan debate, and it did get a little Were they alive today, Randolph and Wilkes, Disraeli and Churchill, Huey Long and Harold Ickes would have to temper their blasts. But in its proper definition as rational public persuasion, the rhetoric of our times needs to be put to constructive use. In the very act of encouraging peaceful argument, we automatical scourage violent protest. In agreeing disagree, as reasonable people, we admit to a unity of purpose. — VICE PRESIDENT SPIRO AGNEW IN A SPEECH TO MICHIGAN REPUBLIlations and U.S. public support for policy in Laos. The impact is neither, accidental nor limited to Laos. Rather, the Foreign Relations Committee, under the determined chairmanship of Sen J. W. Fulbright of Arkansas, is embarked on a systematic assault of U.S. foreign commitments through use of the Senate investigative arm. The Fulbright Symington investigators influence foreign policy far more than largely futile attempts to hamstring the President by Senate resolution.

as a tiny egg, only about 1/16 of an inch in diameter. When it finally hatches into its larval stage, it will cast its shell three times before it becomes recognizable to an untrained eye. If a lobster survives its early life, it will moult, or change its shell four times during the first year beyond the larval stage. After that, it moults once a year growing larger each time. The lobster feeds mostly on fish, either alive or dead. The coasts of Maine and Nova

It's a shame that we consumers (I'm a consumer-look at my waistline) can't believe at my waistline) can't believe the advertisers nowadays. It seems that every store claims the advertisers nowadays. It to be the cheapest, to have the widest aisles, the fanciest decor, the best background music, the most convenient layout, the most-the best-the most-the best, etc. Obviously they can't all be right - most must be wrong. We're the only emporium whose su-periatives have never been challenged. We're lazy and messy and no one has ever disputed it. Every once in a while some hippy meanders in and claims he's going to open a lazier and messier place, but I doubt it. Hippies are too young. They don't have the experience we do. This is not something you learn at college; it takes tedious practice. The only place that has come close is my daughter's room and she acquired her ability by inheritance.

There's another area of advertising that's hard to believe—guarantees. I've heard of stores that advertise satisfaction or your money back but won't take anything back after five days. How can you tell if an item's any good in five days? Other stores never take anything back — or they make you argue it out with some ex-football player — or bounce you from department to departemnt — and then won't give you cash but give out credit slips instead. Who wants that kind of a deal? We sell everything with a 100% "no-hard-time" money-back guarantee. The fact is I'm too lazy (and scared) to fight. The following is a list (100% incomplete) of the goodles that we're peddling this weekend. All of these items are from firestocks, railroad salvage, surplus stocks, closeouts, etc. Some are 100% perfect, some 98% perfect, and some only 2% or 3% perfect. All are bona-fide bargains priced according to condition, and sold with our no-strings-attached money back guarantee. All items are new. Come poke around. Girls' Handbags Men's Swimsuits Groceries In-Out Doors Cookles Candy Appliances Towels Carpeting

South African umpires also want to abolish them.

Bertie Bowron, one of Europe's best known umpires who lives in France but comes over to help at Wimbledon, said:

"Why not abolish them? Affect all, if a service touches the net it usually slows the ball down and gives the receiver an advantage.

"If the server falls to clear the net, why give him another go? It would gave a lot of argument if lets were done away with."
