But with discovery of the corona virus comes this conclusion of prominent researchers:

Chances appear slimmer than ever for any major breakthrough in the near future toward developing conventional preventive vaccines against all the multiple varieties of coldcausing germs.

The scientists say the only hope for any major conquest of the common cold in the forseeable future rests on new experiments aimed at developing chemical drugs-as distinguished from vaccines which are made up of toned-down versions of the viruses themselves. As the international quest con-

Show Fizzles Out Under Rain Threat

By MARGARET AULISIO

(Herald Reporter) For those who didn't make it in time, it was a disappointment, and for those who did, the July 4th fireworks swim World of Meriden display at Mt. Nebo was somewhat of a fizzle. Because against Raymond and Judith of the threat of rain, fireworks were set off at about Healy, $2,000 on two parcels of uled, with no prior notice. Only stood uncomfortably wet while chester Rd. and Shallowbrook the early arrivals got to see directing traffic.

In other recent years, crowds of 30,000 have sat traditionally in the dark at Mt. Nebo for about 45 minutes of colorful, sometimes breath-catching displays.

Wynken, Blynken, And Nod To all their loyal admirers, we hasten surance that Eric Sevareld, John hancellor, and Howard K. Smith are not just three fuzzy minds incapable of putting any sharp analysis on weak logic when it is addressed to them.

They were awed, and tense, and nervous, when they faced the President of their country last Wednesday night. They never emerged from a continuing doubt whether they should handle him as if he were touchable or untouchable. They suffered, without protest, the strain he put on their idea of logic because there was already such a strong sense of strain in the mere act of their confrontation with him. He suffered, and they suffered, from the taut tension of the encounter. But he, being one against three, and being President, after all, did maneuver more freely and did seem to carry the day, or the night, for his particular brand of non-logic and thus turn the event, for the life of the event at least, into an advantage for himself.

But it should not be understood, from this, that Messrs. Sevareid, Chancellor and Smith have suddenly lost their seer-

Put them back in their ivory towers, give them a little physical separation from the actual presence of the President, and they will again seem omnisful and at ease.

Indeed, if they could find a way to do it without seeming to take unfair rebuttal after a debate in which privileges were supposedly equal, they would be capable of tearing up and debunking some of the assumptions they let the President dilate upon, without challenge, last Wednesday night.

Surely every last one of them, including the one who confessed hawkish agreement with the move into Cambodia, could demolish, at his own leisure, the claim the President finally made the legal basis of all his decisions in Vietnam and Cambodia - that his authority descended from his duty, as commander-in-chief, to protect American boys and American lives. He, obviously, did not defend and protect the lives of the American troops whom he sent into Cambodia and who happened to get killed there. But, by the same theory, he could send our armies into China and into Russia with the plea that he was doing this, too, to eliminate sources of supply and weapons which were adding to the capacity of enemy troops elsewhere to take American lives. Surely, in their cool, dispassionate analytical moments, Messrs. Sevareid, Chancellor and Smith could argue that if the commander-in-chief regards the saving of American boys as his top responsibility, he would not send them into new battles, but bring them home from all foreign battles, not quarrel with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, but follow its advice.

The truth is, of course, as all four of the gentlemen on television last Wednesday night knew very well, that the President and the commander-in-chief has to recognize and follow other obligations, ncluding that of spending American lives when he thinks that necessary.

Instead, the President chose to advance a theory which wouldn't normally stand up in a kindergarten debate. Naturally enough, he returned to it again and again, with obvious relish and increasing confidence, after he had found his interlocutors apparently incapable of doing anything more than wynking, blynking and nodding.

But all three of them will eventually merge from that presidential sea of mists, have no fear about that, and the only real loser will be Spiro Agnew, who

Should Mean Something

There are two reasons, both erential, for regarding President Nix on's appointment of David K. E. Bruce to be the new top negotiator in the peace talks at Paris as a hopeful development. The two reasons are similar and al-

It hardly makes sense for either the President or Ambassador Bruce to be doing this for nothing.

The President has withstood, for six months, criticism for not having replaced Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, with somebody of equal stature. Such much need to answer it Furthermore anied by something new in the way of negotiating, it will not answer the old criticism. The deduction has to be that President Nixon made the Bruce appointment with some positive strategy The same kind of reasoning applies even more clearly in the case of Ambassador Bruce. He is reported to be a "dove." In addition, he is appraistering his time. The interpretation is, then, that it makes sense for him to take this assignment only if he has been assured that he is going to have something positive to do, and some latitude in the strategy he follows in his effort

Nothing the President himself said, is the announcement of the Bruce assignment, or in his latest discussions o peace prospects, encouraged such deductions, it must b eadmitted.

But until proved otherwise, this seem another of those foreign policy instances in which it may be more reliable to pay attention to what the President does,

Diamonds Galore?

General Electric isn't estimating, publicly, what it would cost it to produce a gem quality diamond for the retail trade. It merely announces that the process has been perfected, and draws momentary pride from the accomplishment. "Somehow-to me-starting with dirty graphite and turning it into a beautiful stone like this comes very close to fulfilling the dreams of alchemists" was what Dr. Arthur M. Bueche, G.E. vice president for research and development said in announcing the production of the

to its possible practical consequences

The easiest way to estimate what these could be, with the diamond, is to try been, down through the ages, if the ancient alchemists had achieved their original dream, which was for the production of gold.

What would gold have been, in the ensuing centuries? What value would it have had, ornamental or money-wise? What would have taken its place, as the precious thing that could both de-

As we ask such questions about gold, and then turn to the present news about diamonds, we find ourselves guessing that General Electric isn't really totally happy about its engineering success. Proud of its technical and scientific accomplishment it may be. But we doubt that it finds itself enjoying the responsibility of trying to decide what to do about the gem-process it has perfected.

There is, in fact, a sort of fateful atmosphere about such human successesan atmosphere of coming closer to the end of the story, when there will be no more mysteries to unravel, no more rarities to prize, and far too many commonplaces suffocating our experiences down to common denominators.

The interesting question now becomes: Can we abandon the result of our knowledge? Or do we have to make as many diamonds as we can, whether they are good for us or not? Do we ever stop anything we find we can do?

Senatorial Incomes

Running for President is a rathe thankless task, except in one respect. This has been made clear by the publication of the honoraria paid various sen ators for speaking engagements. Senator Edward Muskie, who is the top Democratic contender for 1972, was paid $80,183 for public appearances, twice his Senate salary of $42,500 a year. Senator George McGovern, also a potential Democratic presidential nominee, was second with $63,801. Finishing high on the list was Senator Abraham Rib coff with an income of $21,000. Senator Thomas Dodd reported no income from such sources. Most of the Ribicoff in-have been compelled to file a public accounting of income from speeches and writing. While some of the speech payments may be hidden campaign con-tributions, in the main it would not seem that the speech route is being abused by senators. MIDDLETOWN PRESS.

BARGAIN SHOP

935 MAIN STREET - MANCHESTER

There's no foolin' at Watkins Bargain Shop. Things that arrive here from our regular selling floors because they're down to one-of-a-kind, are discontinued or shop-marked, are given sharp markdowns immediately.

Then every week thereafter, down go prices again, until sold, or they are reduced to 10% of their original price. But few things remain long in this popular shop. What's here today may well be gone tomorrow. So true bargain shoppers visit The Bargain Shop regularly. Here are a few things to look for tomorrow (if they're still here)!

relatively confined area. The design calls for construction of a huge platform support-ing 10 buildings and housing a subsurface structure, plus underground parking space for 3,300 cars. It includes a 44-story office tower building, tallest in the state outside New York City and a half-egg-shaped meeting center. The buildings are to be surrounded by terraced walk ways with reflecting water pools Rockefeller also decided that a new arterial highway system would be needed to handle mall traffic. The state thus came up with a $38-million highway net-work featuring an $8.7-million high-level bridge across the Hudson River aiming right into the heart of the mall. Schuyler hired an outside conting firm, the George Fuller Co., to supervise the project. Fuller was supposed to pre-scribe cost estimates for the various contracts and coordinate the efforts of contractors.
