> Switch to GOP In 1968 Laid To Connally

WASHINGTON (AP) - A new book asserts that former Gov. John B. Connally of Texas, unhappy at not receiving the Democratic vice presidential nomi-nation, worked behind the scenes for President Nixon during the 1968 campaign.
In the book, "The Resurrection of Richard Nixon," political writer Jules Witcover wrote that Connally supported the Republican nominee with the un-derstanding he would be named

The understanding fell through, the book contends, be-cause Connally threw in with Democratic nominee Hubert H. Humphrey in the closing days of campaign, fearing Humphrey would carry Texas without his help.

Connally, reached at his ranch in Floresville, Tex., said Vednesday, "Every statement made about me in the book is worse than inaccurate, it's a lie. "I made no commitment t anybody to support Richard Nixon and I did not support him," said Connally who was secretary of the Navy under the late President John F. Kennedy. "Just contrary to what he (Witcover) says, when Humphrey's chances looked the darkest, I appeared with him on platforms in Texas ,and when his chances appeared the brightest, I wasn't there," Connally said. Toward Takeover Junction jobs for firemen on locomotives where no shoveling of coal is done has been made the cause for a railroad strike, which has been quelled, for 60 days at least, by the usual Presidential order.

It has not been union "feather bedding" which has led the nation's railroads to the plight they are in today. It has been the automobile and the truck and the plane. But irresponsible unionism which has tried to defend an anachromism, and often libertine management, which has abused its trust, have not been giving the railroads very much help in meeting their modern

And where unionism and management meet to argue over which is going to sit in which position in what may be the last caboose, the bargaining is more savage today than it would ever have been back in the heyday of the railroads, when there would have been much greater justice in union demands for better sharing in the returns. The bargaining between union and management never gets as hard and sharp and relentless, it often seems, as when the enterprise they are quarreling over is obviously in deep trouble.

The bargaining itself gets to be as sick as the railroads are. Neither side, much of a vision of the future of the railroads, or very much instinct to make the possible revival of the railroads a joint enterprise.

Between a union which insists on having a man stand where the fireman once stood and management which is continually beseeching public authorities for higher subsidies for fewer trains on fewer routes, the public has precious little chance to say or get what it wants. It wants some decent public service for its public money."

Perhaps the sooner anachronistic labor demands and negative-minded management conspire together to bring the whole railroad system crashing down so that somebody has to step in and run it as well as finance it the better it will be. On that basis, we suppose we ought to be satisfied with the current news about the railroads, and applaud the way extra firemen can step up the speed toward Takeover Junction.

nks whitewash some of Pagan's temples to earn merit for future lives: the temples were built as offerings to religion.

Noble brick vault gave entrance to inner sanctuary through massive wall.

Monuments of Pagan extend for miles over the dusty silence of the Irrawaddy plain.

The monuments stand witness to the ardent Buddhist convictions of Pagan's rulers. They were religious offerings, built as handsomely as the donor, usually a king or prince, could afford. Except for a few monasteries and libraries, the buildings had no practical value: they were not churches in our sense, though they did serve to remind the people of Buddha and his teachings. At one time, Pagan had about 13,000 religious buildings in brick or stone. Over 1,000 remain basically intact, and some 6,000 more survive in a ruined state, scattered over about 240 square miles. The ruins of the old city of Pagan lie in a broad arc twelve miles long on the left bank of the Irrawaddy river. The people of Pagan to-day, hardworking peasants, live in a handful of quiet villages separated by arid land and dominated by towering monuments of all shapes and sizes. Their lives seem to have changed little since Pagan was overrun in 1287 by Mongol invaders led by Kubla Khan, and Burma's golden age came to an end.

This Week's PICTURE SHOW by Horst Faas.

Typical silhouette of Pagan's monuments is a bell-shaped tower; at one time there were some 13,000, of which over 1,000 remain intact.
