The Brazilian Way

rom Brazil there comes a chilling ccount of a vigilante system of justice which, unfortunately, not only represents something some thoughtless Americans have sometimes felt like advocating, but also something that a few other Americans may have begun practicing.

There has now appeared, in several Brazilian cities, the work of self-appointed "death squads," believed to have been organized and staffed by off-duty policemen type these Brazilian "death quads" execute is the same type which nnoys many American citizens and poce forces. They keep on committing crimes. Although they can be ught and brought to trial, they seem to get off with light punishment which permits them to be out committing new crimes again almost immediately afterward. In community after community they appear in the police news week afr week and year after year.

Their work consists in ridding society, by private, unofficial execution, of some of its more annoying petty criminals.

But in some cities down in Bravil they don't get away with it forever, not after their bodies have been found, with the

There are supposedly civilized razilians who defend the operations of he Death Squads, arguing that what hey do is rid society of bad elements hat wouldn't be on the loose anyway if the courts functioned with proper severity

And it is notable that, although the Death Squad killings have been reported again and again, and although the killings are obviously murders there has never yet been any arrest or trial for anybody suspected of having had a role in one of these executions,

There is one theory which departs from the idea of an organized "Death Squad" in operation. One Brazilian police official has been quoted as speculating that "if a policeman kills a criminal in legitimate defense, well, he might as well dump the body somewhere without any identification because any investigation would be long and troublesome."

In this country, perhaps we should be thankful, we have a system of justice petty criminals can slip through in order to offend again. In this country, if we suspect that an execution has taken place, there can be an official investigation. In this country, an officer who kills in the performance of his duty can still expect an official evaluation of his conduct.

But perhaps the actual news of what has been happening down in Brazil comes just in time to stop some of us from beginning to wish, out loud, that we, too, had some efficient system for ridding society of its expensive, worthless criminal trash.

The ultimate thing about what has begun to happen down in Brazil is that the man with the gun in his hand is the grand jury, the prosecutor, the defense attorney, the trial jury, the judge, and the executioner all in one, and that it is, in the end, the gun alone which elects, appoints and empowers him to play all these roles, including that of God, without any other qualification.

Mrs. Binh And The Dow Jones Recently, the Wall Street Journal daily commentary on the behavior of the stock market led off with this statement: "The stock market was jolted at noon yasterday out of an early sinking spell by what at first seemed an easing in the Vietcong's adamant negotiating stand, but much of the gain later drained away. A few minutes before noon came a press service report that the Vietcong's foreign minister, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, said she favors formation of a coalition government in South Vietnam that could include some members of the present regime. The Dow Jones industrial average, which was off about 2 1-2 points just before this news broke, immediately surged and was ahead 9.52 points at the end of the next half hour. But the gains then started slowly melting after the news tickers carried more of Mrs. Binh's statement in which she said South Vietnam's President Thieu and Vice President Ky couldn't be part of a Vietcong-supported coalition government."

Meanwhile, the New York Times description of the same day's trading went like this:

"Stock prices surged upward in heavy trading in a brief noon-hour rally yesterday, only to lose most of their gains in slower and quieter trading later in the session. The rally, which carried the Dow-Jones industrial average from a loss of 0.89 point at noon to a gain of 9.62 points a half-hour later, was triggered by a news report that the Vietcong would accept members of the present Government in South Vietnam in a coalition government. To market traders, the report seemed to indicate a possible breakthrough in peace negotiations. Later reports, however, indicated that there was nothing new in the Vietcong position and prices faded steadily."

We have several questions to ask

First, does the stock market mov first for certain reasons, or does it just move, and then wait for the analysts to tell it why it moved as it did?

If the stock market does move for such reasons as were ascribed to it in these two newspaper accounts, when is it going to grow up and become as knowledgeable and sophisticated as the great keeper of the nation's wealth should be?

There happened to be, on the day in question, several optimistic circumstances in the news which might have been considered worth a rally. Corporate reports were continuing to be better than expected. If it was peace the market was interested in, there were rumors of a positive upturn in the chances for the American truce plan in the Near East which might have been far more important than the flimsy report from the

If the market did move the way it did for the reasons these two prominent oberver-analysts say it did, then it must just what some of us erstmillionaires have been thinking lately-a crazy, irresponsible place for any sound speculator to be patronizing.

A Tremendous New Fact

Bad news always did travel fast; now t travels instantaneously. But gloom isn't the only thing that travels freely across the borders of the world. Today, under the big eye of television with the busy satellites whirling over-head and the telephone lines and pipeines and airports endlessly connecting people and things, the world has been pulled tightly together. Not only are the countries connected by roads and wires and pipes; they are connected by policies and pacts and agreements and commerce and matters of health and information and money currencies and trade. Not only diseases are epidemic today:

the words on a picket sign, the graffiti words on a wall, a college slogan, a phrase in a speech, an insult - all these ideas are flung around the world immediately. A dramatic picture or newsreel is seen around the world within hours

No nation can escape this wonderful and terrible new immediacy. And no nation or institution has yet really learned how to use this wonderful and terrible new power of mass international commu-The prime fact is that we could never say things like this before. It would have been nonsense to claim that there was a general world view on anything. You could not know what the whole world felt or thought because the countries got the news at different times - or never got the news at all.

But we have had television for years; and it is television which instantly joins cultures, customs, habits, races, lifestyles. Almost all the world joins day and night in international moments of emotion, from grief and anger to pleasure and pomp; millions of people see a soldier talking, a President talking; they see the soldier and the President shot; they see them both buried.

What we have, therefore, as the result of all the connections, and through television, is a new kind of international unity. It is fragile, it is formless, it shifts like water; it has no body or structure; but it is there - it is really there. It is the start of the formation of world opinion, of a world audience. And it is momentous, because it is the beginning of the first true unity the world has ever

Yesterday afternoon, De Ernie McNally stared down a long hallway in the Police-Court Building into the eyes of a woodchuck. Det. McNally called Policewoman Pat Graves to verify what he couldn't quite believe. By the time she arrived the woodchuck had made his getaway leaving a befuddled McNally with no clues. .He questioned everyone. No one had seen the wood

Continuing the search, Po licewoman Graves kicked over an old car seat being beld as evidence, and there was the woodchuck.

Lt. Robert Lannan came the woodchuck by the tail and sending him on his way through a nearby door.

Mob Beats Frenchmen who Fly Cong Flag

SAIGON (AP) - Two young Frenchmen climed atop a war statue in Saigon today and waved a large Viet Cong flag until a crowd pelted them with rocks, pulled down the flag and beat them.

A policeman and a few spectators finally rescued the pair identified as Andre Marcel Men ras, 24, and Jean Pierre Debris 26 both former French school teachers in Vietnam. They were arrested.

The incident occurred in Lam Son Square, the city's main intersection. The 25-foot statue depicts two Vietnamese Marines charging into battle.

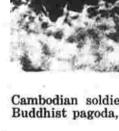

One of the youths unfurled the 4-foot by 10-foot Viet Cong flag and sat on top of the helmet of one of the marines. The two demonstrators threw down copies of what appeared to be a Viet Cong leaflet calling for immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam and overthrow of the Saigon govern-

About 50 persons gathered and began hurling rocks at the pair, hitting them several times. Both youths carried gas masks. Debris remained atop the nighest part of the statue, holding the flag and dodging the rocks. But a Vietnamese youth scaled the statue and ripped the flag from its metal pole. French sources in Saigon said
