The new independent governmen agency which is going to run the postal service is going to have, as one of its imrovements over the present Post Office Department system, the right to set its own rates, without action by Congress. (One may assume that if anything has been left out of the prospectus, the list can be amplified.)

All this sounds like the best of all possible organizations. And perhaps, by the time it gets around to giving us all as individuals our chance to pay our $15 membership dues and thus join in the movement, we will all be eager to do so, and consider it a privilege.

First, however, some of us will have to rid ourselves of certain doubts. One does not have to be a cynic, bu merely a sorrowful observer, to feel that the appearance of such organiza tions in our midst is more of a symptom and a progression of our social malady than a possible cure.

Realism about such a thing as 'common cause" may say that it is something which has to rise among us, out of the chemistry between ourselves and between ourselves and our circumstance, rather than anything that can be prescribed for us by some social doctor
