It did seem possible for a member of a minority, and a minority scandalously advertised, to be given a fair trial. It did seem possible for a Connecticut judge and jury, a Connecticut prosecutor and a Connecticut counsel for the lefense, to conduct themselves with dignity and decorum in the most challenging circumstances. It did become possible for the defense attorney, after the verdict, to stand outside the court house and tell the tempestuous minds of the followers and associates of the convicted man that the judge and jury and the system itself had been fair. That same defense attorney immediately filed an appeal from the result. The same crowd that took his assurance the trial had been fair may try to destroy the court house itself tomorrow. Review by higher courts may emphasize parts of the proceedings which may, in a later light, seem open to question.

After their part of the ordeal, which was surely the longest and most torturesome, the jurors found themselves at peace with themselves and with one another. The agonies of our revolutionary times are not going to be ended quickly; our institutions are never going to be completely secure; our own doubts and cynicisms are never going to disappear completely. But this was a moment of strength.

Not Even A Good Gesture The backers of the Hatfield - McGovern amendment hoped to persuade at . least 40 votes for their proposition, but got only 39 Senators.

They would have got far fewer if there had ever been any real chance that their amendment would pass. It was a thing that, in the clutch, not even those who sympathized with its general purposes could have voted for easily, if there had been a chance of its taking legal effect.

The idea of setting a timetable, by enacted law, on the business of our withdrawal from Vietnam, had its roots in the fears of Senate doves that the Nixon Administration is not to be trusted in its own assurances that it intends to wind down the war in Vietnam. They want to be sure the Administration keeps its pledges. And they even argued that for the Senate to set a deadline for total American withdrawal would actually ease the task of the Administration in keeping its own promises.

No man can help worrying about such hings, and we forward our condolences to the Vice President. But we would also like to compliment him on something that, in our friendly opinion, more compensates for a little thinness on top, or more gray on the sides. He has, with that fine ramrod back of his, one of the most magnificent carriages in American public life, and that is always what sweeps us off our feet, even before he speaks, impressing us so much we would never have looked for sideburns if he himself had not admitted

The theory that the people of the United States are inexorably moving toward a dual social system, with one part white and the other black, is not even hear that assessment again and again, the opposite direction. The races are beming more integrated all the time, and the most obvious sign of the trend s the increasing number of black families who are moving into middle-and-uper-middle-class neighborhoods.

Sun worship began as a religious matter. The Aztec Indians made designs such as the one top, left, representing the dying sun. The ancient Incas were sun worshipers too, and to make fire they captured the sun's rays in a golden cup called a chipana, the concentrated rays setting afire a small piece of cotton in the cup. A high priest is shown doing this in the top right picture. By the 19th century, sun worship had taken on a connotation of fashion, rather than devotion to a god. Seaside resorts became increasingly popular at the end of the century, though bathing dresses concealed most of the body, and many ladies sat on the beach fully clothed, as seen in the bottom left picture. The flappers of the 1920s cut down their suits quite a bit (bottom right) but they were far from matching the bikini- clad beach bunnles of today in amount of
