NOTICE TO TELEPHONE CUSTOMERS

For the first time since 1953 we are planning increases in the rates for many out-of-state calls.

(A) AT&T

AT&T has filed a new schedule of rates with the Federal Communications Commission which increases charges for customer-dialed interstate calls during weekday business hours and for all operator-assisted interstate calls. All rates for calls you dial yourself without operator assistance in the evenings, at night, on weekends or on holidays will remain unchanged or be reduced.

The new rates are filed to become effective on January 19, 1971.

Here are the specific provisions of the new rates for out-of-state calls:

- 1. Rates for station-to-station calls you dial yourself without operator assistance from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, will be increased - up to 10 cents for the first three minutes.
- 2. Rates for all operator-assisted calls (including person-to-person, credit-card, collect, and coin telephone calls) will be increased in amounts ranging from 5 cents to 30 cents for the first three minutes.
- 3. Where rates for the first three minutes of a call are increased, the rates for each additional minute will be increased in a range of one cent to five cents.
- 4. Rates for station-to-station calls you dial yourself without operator assistance during evenings, nights, or weekends will remain the same - or, in a few cases, actually be reduced. For example, the rate for calls dialed coast-to-coast from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. Saturday, or 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday, will still be 70 cents for the first three minutes.

This will be the first general increase in interstate Long Distance rates in 17 years. During that period, in spite of continuing inflation, interstate Long Distance rates have been reduced repeatedly. Even with the increase, the level of these rates will still be about 14 percent below the 1953 level. Yet in those 17 intervening years, the cost of living has gone up 47 percent.

The new rates recognize the higher labor and equipment costs associated with operatorassisted calls, and are designed to increase total revenues from interstate service by about six percent.

We have filed for the increase so that we can assure adequate earnings to attract investors in a money market which, like everything else, has felt the impact of inflation. This ability to attract new capital is essential if we are to continue to provide high-quality telecommunications service and meet the growing demands for communications services in this country

One Thing The Bombs Damaged The bombs that exploded somewhere in North Vietnam last weekend delivered their clearest and easily located impact on the relationship between the administration at Washington and the American people.

The prime sufferer from the renewal of bombing over North Vietnam was the credibility Americans felt able to place in Washington officialdom. It was not only that the fact of the bombing itself constituted the implementation of a new policy. It was also that there seemed. on the part of leadership, a deliberate intent and willingness to act out a deception of the American people so brazenly as to invite the people themselves to be willing partners in their own deception. The admissions and announcements that came from officialdom, as to what the bombings were, why they had been conducted, what they had hit, and what their extent had been were all accompanied by an obvious crossing of official fingers. We were supposed to isten politely and act as if we were satisfied; we were supposed to understand, nonetheless, that what we were grasps the neither - nor of the public being told was a fiction.

The fatalistic feeling with which the American people found themselves invited to play a conspiratorial part in the erection of explanations not even Hanoi -or perhaps one should say especially Hanol - was supposed to believe, was heightened by the fact that it came so soon after the political campaign and its revelation of how the old Nixon had, for nearly two years of office, been lurking close under the surface of the new Nixon.

In the last two weeks of the political campaign, the country had the spectacle of a President who had begun his term calling for lowered voices and a democracy of reasonableness taking to the hustings with the prosecutorial fury of some fundamentalist prophet. That performance broke the long, carefully nurtured spell in which this President had made an impressive effort to serve as President of all the people.

If the President could thus turn against his own two year performance in the search of some immediate political gain by rougher means, what assurance could there be that he has not been likewise tempted to abandon his brave and idealistic attempt at unilateral peacemaking in Vietnam in order to lunge back toward the earlier idea of a military victory there?

if there was some immediate gain which made the risks of this articular burst of bombing seem worth while to him, how do we know that some new appraisal of risk and gain may not lead him to some other revival and re-escalation of the war tomorrow?

It is far too early to assess the results of last weekend's bombs in terms of the future progress of war or peace in Vietnam. We don't even know where the bombs fell, geographically speaking, in North Vietnam.

But there was an impact of their fall, on the domestic scene, which can be located. It was between the people and heir government.

And just as, after the campaign, the uggestion was that the sooner Mr. Nixon got back to being President, the better, so it might be added, now, that the kind of President he should get back to being is that kind of President who pretended, at least, to have abandoned the idea he could beat North Vietnam' into. submission at the conference table.

MANCHESTER EVENING HERALD, MANCHESTER, CONN., TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1970

Portrait Of An Uncertain Country When you are steering a small boat along a narrow, winding channel it is sometimes necessary to look back where you have been in order to tell where you are going. With wind, waves and tide pushing in different directions, it is the marker astern that shows whether you are drifting right or left, or

It is sometimes that way, too, in other iffairs. By now, for example, everyone s aware that last week's election was a standoff, both as between the two major political parties and even as a reflecion of public sentiment on the "issues" Vietnam, the economy, law-and-order and the like.

What that means for the future, no one is quite sure. The most widespread view is that the election says the country is marking time, unwilling yet to give its allegiance to either party or any political point of view.

The evidence for this is persuasive, especially if you look backward. Indeed the evidence suggests that not only is ours an uncertain country today but that it has been - politically speaking - for more than a generation. For a long time we seem to have been caught in irons, unwilling or unable to move decisively in any political direction, bereft of captains to catch our fancy.

It all began, or so it seems now in retrospect, in the aftermath of World War II. Harry Truman's upset victory in 1948 was so spectacularly unexpected that the narrowness of his victory passed almost unnoticed.

Two years later Mr. Truman's party lost the House. Four years later it lost the White House. Then everybody said President Eisenhower had revitalize the GOP, and in turn buried the Roosevelt revolution. But Mr. Eisenhower probably the most popular man of this century in the White House, had in his time to reckon with a Democratic Con-

So it went. If it was not always a case of divided Government, it was always a case of confused mandates. The martydom of President Kennedy fuzzed the remembrance that his, too, was a squeaky victory and that on the eve of assassination he was in deep political trouble. Everyone remembers the narrowness of President Nixon's vic-

The results in terms of political philosophies have been as confused as in terms of the organized parties. Who would dare assert after all this that either conservatives or liberals are in ascendancy? If you did, how would you explain Reagan winning and Murphy losing; Humphrey winning in Minnesota and Buckley winning in New York?

So, or so it seems to me, the picture is confusingly clear. The American people, at this juncture in their history, are unwilling to entrust their destiny to any political party or to any exclusive political philosophy.

This may be untidy, but it has its merits. For one, it presents an opportunity to a political leader - or a party - who mood and gives it shape and substance.

Two things must be understood. On is that the Roosevelt era is dead Its es sence was that government could be Big Brother to us all, and that the United States Government, as the most powerful government of all, could and should play Big Brother to the world. All that was done grew out of that; from Social ecurity to global intervention.

It may seem curious to lump the rebellious young with conservative mid dle-agers, yet in one respect they are brothers under the skin. Both share the disillusionment with the concept of the all-powerful government and the all powerful United States. That disillusion ment is likewise shared, so the evidence suggests, by the amorphous mass that has come to be called Middle America.

Enter, now, a paradox. The people seem no more ready to accept the idea that government should revert to its pre-New Deal pristine state. They feel t welfare extravagances but they will not reconstitute the county poorhouse they find Vietnam senseless but they are not ready to retreat into an isolaionist cocoon, Name your issue, and the same mood prevails.

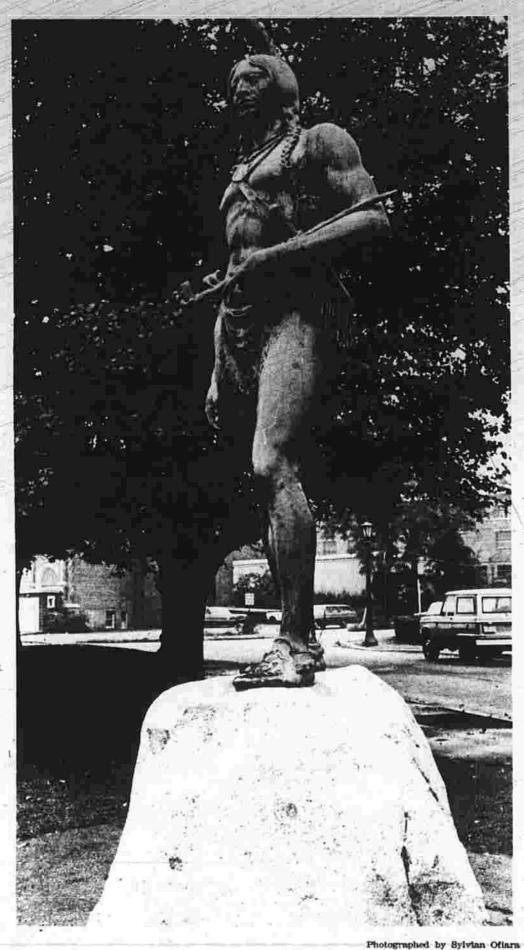

Thus, the political troubles of those who appear to be extremists. It's hard to think of Barry Goldwater as a radi cal, but that is the impression he left o most people; they were afraid he would dismantle everything. That is certainly George Wallace's trouble, and why he is doomed to be no more than the leader of a pocket borough. It is equally the trouble for those who would speak for the New Left, or even give the impres sion that they would embrace its ideol

Which brings us back to this Middle America, a concept so often discussed and so often, it seems to me, misunder stood. The Nixon Administration, and notably Vice President Agnew, rightly understood its "bothers" with crime, ampus unrest, black-white friction and the rest. Yet the election suggests they overplayed their hand; Mr. somehow Agnew, though he has said a lot of true risks coming through as an extremist himself.

If one more judgment on this election is not too much, it might be suggested that people are concerned about the social and economic issues of the time, distillusioned about what might be called the "liberal" solutions of the past, ready to look at new faces and new ap proaches, but not ready to respond any hysteria or any extremiscm. Pe haps the key to Senator-elect Buckley's success is that he managed to offer the one without the other.

Anyway, there's no reason to be surprised at the confusion in the national picture reflected last week. It was, when you come to think on it, quite normal - or, at any rate, the sort of picture we have been painting of ourselves these past 30 years

And if it's confusing to us, think of the poor politician. If he misreads the drift, he is almost sure to run aground. VERMONT ROYSTER IN THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.
