Williams, chairman of the company, which purchases some of its water from Rockville Water and Aqueduct and services a portion of South Windsor and other area towns. According to the annual report of the company, just re-leased, operating revenues for 1970 reached a record level despite a decrease in sales to in-

Totaling $3,447,778, the operating revenues were up 4.1 per cent from the previous year Williams said the improvement was accomplished despite a six per cent decrease in sales to in. dustry which resulted from a general business slowdown. Total expenses were up 6.8 per cent to $3,101,591. Williams explained this was largely due to wage increases, higher local and state taxes, higher cost of purchased water and interest rates on a greater volume of bank loans. #### That Piece Of Pipe

The incident of the pipe piece deception by the Defense Department is a very small thing, but still as big as all our misfortune in the Asian misadventure which has now tortured us for nearly ten years.

The small deception occurred at a Pentagon briefing, staged for newsmen, last week, the main purpose of the briefing being an exposition and defense of the "incursion" into Laos, Defense Secretary Melvin Laird, that doughty keeper of the straight face, was there. But the main exposition was delivered by a respected career officer, Lieut. Gen. John W. Vogt, who occupies the high position of director of the joint staff of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff. As he lectured the newsmen on the advantages of the strike into Laos, he had on display a three foot section of pipe which he identified as having been cut out of the Ho Chi Minh Trail system. It was, he said, a sample of a longer length torn out of the enemy supply line, and he hailed this as a "major achievement which will cause substantial inconvenience to the ene-

The only thing wrong with this exposition was that the particular piece of pipe on display was not anything hot from recent battle in Laos, but something which scouting party had picked up probably months before the present full scale invasion. It was still quite probable and believable that the South Vietnamese troops had, in their current operation, ripped up lengths of enemy pipeline inside Laos. But the Pentagon inally had to admit, under the suspicious and persistent questioning of newsmen, that the particular piece of pipe it had displayed was not an authentic product of the new invasion.

Why had the Pentagon committed this small deception? Because, apparently, some eager beaver thought it might help win the propaganda case for the new adventure into Laos.

Why were Washington newsmen suspicious and persistent? Because they have found themselves the victims of a long list of minor deceptions, all of them intended to add up to a propaganda defense of the war to the American people, in the past.

The one consistent trouble with such small deceptions throughout our involvement in Vietnam has been that these deceptions have been much more likely to beguile their own inventors and actors than to convince or persuade the people of America. Instead of making us confident of the leadership which is conducting our affairs in Asia, these wistful, amateurish attempts to influence our appraisal have led us into an inability to be sure we believe anything anybody tells us.

And, tragically, leadership which finds idself confronted with skepticism and non-belief does not always find its way back to simple truth, but merely calculates that it has not embroidered, simulated, and acted convincingly enough in the past, so that the more it feels itself suspected, the more it strains for belief, thus widening, still more, the gap it might be seeking to close.

This is indeed a vicious kind of circle, because it keeps cutting through the heart of a nation's respect for its own leadership and leadership-selection

No Short Word Will Do

The new word by which we shall all show how much we are or are not with it for the next few weeks or months is . the word advocacy. It now moves in onus from all points and we all feel forced to groove with it.

Advocacy takes the place of that dialogue of which we made so much when we first felt a need to deal with the fact that some skins are black. It stands a more of a cue for our times than commitment and involvement, the two words which put march and loot and strike and burn in vogue when dialogue grew fat and dull and tired.

Advocacy, as well, ends the need for polarization, the word long as a phrase which bore us through the months when, tired of dialogue and sick of the small gains to be won from commitment and involvement, we were in a mood to draw each to his own kind and let that

One of the good old word codes of our times we do not leave; in fact it has helped us make our way from each mode to the next. All we do and all we say gets a lift from the word hopefully. It is with good hope, then, that we place our next sense of where we are and what we do in the wide arms of the new word advocacy.

As near as we can tell at this stage of its chic, it means that in a bold mass meld of commitment and involvement and dialogue we now set out to talk and push some cause close up to those who, hopefully, can help it with vote or

One thing does not change from cause to cause or door to door: We do not trust the short word to say what we mean.

The Subtle Questions

At this point, we think the questions to alse about the South Vietnamese strike nto Laos are not the obvious military mes; indeed, we think it a mistake to judge the operation of a failure too hast The questions of the moment, rather, are more subtle ones about an evolution, or clouding, or even escalation of the purposes of the Vietnamization policy. The strategic justification of the Laos operation, it's important to remember, is to reduce the North Vietnamese offen sive capability in South Vietnam next year, when American forces will b smaller and more vulnerable. One way to do this is to disrupt supply routes, the original tactical intention of the mission. penetration was apparently stopped of its planned depth when it be-evident the North Vietnamese were choosing to fight. But if the enemy spends his men and material fighting for nountaintops in Laos, he will not have them to spend in South Vietnam next year. Thus the allied strategy can work even if the outcome of the Laotian fight is in itself inconclusive.

he obvious risk is that the outcom will be worse than that. So far the South Vietnamese have taken a number of individual defeats without cracking, and the heavy fighting has been costly for the Communists. There are suggestions, though, that the enemy in assing for a huge battle, another great throw of the dice. By massing, he will be open to heavy punishment from U.S. airpower. But he can hope to humiliate the ly, and to unravel Saigon government namization policy.

This very high risk in the Laotia strike, even if it is in fact offset by a omparably higher chance of success seems to us to raise questions about the administration's fundamental purpose in Indochina. We have always understood amization as a two-pronged policy. The Paramount purpose was to withdraw American forces, but a secondary purpose was to preserve at least chance that a non-Communist government could be maintained in Saigon. Giving Saigon that chance was necessary to American honor and world credbility, but if South Vietnam did fall when the time came to stand alone, at least American troops would no longer be involved.

The questions start because on its fac the Laotian operation looks more like an attempt to insure a non-Communist South Vietnam than an attempt to insure continued American withdrawals. No that its success would not speed with drawals, but one wonders whether risks of this magnitude are really critical to their continuation.

One wonders even more after a remarkable article by Peregrine Worsthorne of the London Sunday Telegraph based on private interviews with President Nixon and his national security adviser, Henry Kissinger. In an entirely sympathetic and optimistic way it de-scribes how Vietnamization was once erely a face-saving formula to cover a forth Vietnamese victory, but has now ecome a way to guarantee a non-Comunist South Vietnam.

We hope as hard as we can that events indicate the optimism Mr. Worsthorne escribes. We have long been convinc hat, after all that has been done so far, t will be far better for the United States oth at home and abroad if a non-Comunist Saigon remains to show for the acrifice. And just because optimism has been wrong in the past is no guarantee it will always be wrong in the future; this administration's track record renains pretty good as its withdrawals

But even if some sort of success is fially won in Vietnam, it will not begin balance the costs we have paid in blood in treasure and in the strain on the American social fabric. The purpose of ending these costs must remain the keystone of policy, and there is a langer it will be subtly downgraded administration starts to smell larger success. If it looks as if Saigon's ndependence can in fact be guaranteed there will be a temptation to run a few more risks, risks that may compromise the purpose of withdrawals. If the Laotian operation does fall in any dramatic way all this may not mat-, for then perhaps the administration will never have to choose between its two purposes. But we desperately hope it can keep and has kept a firm grip on the first purpose of withdrawal. The load of accumulated grief is such that doub lingers, that we are haunted by the thoughts of future troubles when we will look back and say, we had a chance to get out with a modicum of honor but we did not take it. -- WALL STREET JOUR-
