There is an element of moral judgment involved in this particular tax, almost as if the Legislature and the Governor were saying to the people of Connecticut that, since it is wicked and unhealthy to smoke, it is a proper state function to tax it as if the state intended pensive. This is a very strange thing to find in the psychology of a Legislature and Governor who have just cooperatgambling to Connecticut, a wicked and unhealthy habit, precisely in order to be

But it seems impossible, from the angle of justice in distributing the state tax burden, to give any good reason smokers should pay a proportionately much heavier portion of the state tax burden than people who merely eat candy, or who smoke cigars, or who drink pop, or who drink vodka, or who snack

The somewhat insufferable explanation of why the Legislature and Goversmokers rather than to any other habit is that they considered they were doing it for the smoker's own good. But they don't, of course, really want to "cure" him because then they would get no revenue from him. The idea that they are doing something which is "good" for the smoker is, then, merely their alibi, not their purpose.

Whatever the alibi, whatever the purpose, the result is an injustice which does not belong in any equitable tax sys-

An even more significant experiment with the new theory that an imposed si-
