Only We Can Make It Work phase of his new "economic game plan," is attempting something for which he should have a good measure of support from all of us, no matter what our own special economic interest.

He is trying to have us control ourselves, in our economic deeds, without having to be whipped and policed into it, without our having to set ourselves up a tremendous regulation and enforcement bureaucracy.

His tactic should appeal to that area in all of us which realizes that the one thing we can't do is to let the economy follow our own worst undisciplined instincts but which has a fundamental dread of trying line by line dollar by dollar federal control of the economy the 90-day freeze, instead of being ended abruptly, is going to be continued and tions, each designed to see that nobody is getting away with too much or suffering too much in any particular field, the first thing to realize is that only the good selves can really make such a relatively loose system work.

And the second thing to realize is that if we don't contribute this support - in the form of some sacrificial reasonableness in the specific matter of what is going to come into our own pocketbooks during the course of what may be an extended emergency period - then the failure of the President's game is almost certainly going to decree, for him or for a successor, responsibilities of leadership much more grim than those which exist at the moment.

What is required of us all is something in the department of mood. We have been trained, often as a matter of economic survival, to think of number one first. We have been well schooled, as a result of past injustices, in the techniques of keeping tab on what everyone else may be getting and in figuring out what its equivalent ought to be for ourselves. President Nixon, the other night, used one of those effective sentences of onesyllable words to offer us an alternative point of view.

"What is best for all of us," he said, "is best for each of us."

We need, for a time, to have the sharpnosed, sharp-edged normal talents of all our regular economic interests gentled down so they can try living inside that soft concept. "What is best for all of us is best for each of us.'

The Cold Toe Cure

cure for the common cold, consisting of sing, temporarily, the underside of either big toe, has now been discovered and may soon be available to everybody. The search has been long and siduous. Some of us, along the way, to content ourselves with akeshift substitutes for the ultimate remedy. Almost any one of them, on first use, and for varying periods afterwards sometimes lasting into a second season, can prove effective, and almost qualify for the official title of cure. But, until now, the latest miracle has always worn off and become boring and has lost efectiveness, necessitating the search for the next wonderful discovery by science. But now, as soon as we can get the right kind of machine for putting the our tilg toe, the sniffles and trickles and the melancholy of man's number one discomfort will be guaranteed to vanish at our bidding.

There may, at the moment we are bout to insert our big toe into the coldcure-machine, be a touch of hesitation, as we hold one last small debate about that nice luxurious discomfort for such a cold cold cure, but the outcome of the debate can be predicted, as soon as we realize that we will, for a time at least, be able to talk about the cure as much as we could about the cold.

Meanwhile, as we bow in homage to the modern science which has programmed this cure for us, we cannot resist throwing a bitter, resentful glance back

Night The Wind Wouldn't Blow he south above of Anglesey, almost a mile long, with a rocky western spur where the shallow channel of a small river estuary suddenly falls into the sea through a narrow gash in the banked sand. Aberffraw is a good place to fish water, particularly when the wind is

Then, there are big breakers between ter. It is isolated and bleak at night ter. sand, but it gave me the feeling of fish, a little short-breathed excitement which made the walk along the bank towards a big tide and a run of bass. But there was no wind, and the sea was sluggish. It moved like a man in a fever. The breakers fell slowly against the sand the wide center of the curving beach where the water is shallower and there are sand eels and razorfish for feeding bass. There was no ripple on the channel same way as were the sandhills in the night shadow. In the dusk you could not see the clean, sandy bottom; you knew it was never deeper than knee-high at low tide, but so far as you could see it It was an oppressive, hot evening. B a chill came with the dusk, a sharp, sudden chill with a feeling of autumn which in turn is a sense of coming winter. As I reached the water's edge it was enough to make me think of the coming south coast cod fishing, a nostalgic sign, a sud-den impulse which vanished as I measured the chances of catching a bass. There were only the two breakers, small lazy ones. All the sea birds were on the beach pecking and kicking at the sand for lice and sand fleas; nothing hung at a glide over the water watching The sea had a great sense of emptiness. The beach was unmarked except for the bird track marks. In some places the sand had been blown into long drifts by the earlier gales and nothing had broken the smooth, matt surface except pits of rain. Sometimes there was a crying bird, the ticking-clock oyster catchers, and the thud of the two lazy breakers; otherwise, nothing.

I cast behind the breakers. It was unecessary to lob the baited hooks more than 30 or 40 yards. If there were bass in the sea they would be close inshore looking for sand eels. Bass like the bait on the bottom hook, and razor fish like the top-hook bait. If a bite came it would probably be the only one and I needed to be ready, I tightened the line and held he rod with the point low to give a long back-swing on the strike.

The tide came slowly at first, then very fast, not foaming up the sand like a good heavy surf tide but pushing and menacing. With each new wave I moved ingers, sensing every little vibration, every slight bump of the lead. There was no moon visible through the clouds, and when the humid chill made me shiver I wished that it was late autumn and the sky full of stars and a big frost ring around the moon. I wished the would blow and the fish would When the fish did come it was nearly high water. He hit the buit with a double rattle and ran with it, jerking the rod tip down hard. I struck and felt the answer ng weight and struggle. The fish pulled gainst me, rolling and running in short dames at a right angle to the shore. I bent the rod hard and pulled him toward me until he was swirling only a few yards out. Then he was spent and with a final spasmodic thump of his stantly away by the following water. I ran to pick up my fish. I thought it would go six pounds. He was a fine fish, better because all the rules and senses said there would be no bass on a night pounds. It was green, silver, and blue shaded. It was the largest black pollack, which the trawlermen call coalfish, that I had ever taken from the shore. I had longed to catch a bass. I needed a bass lish sling. It blended well with the other apes in the too dark night Nothing moved, the water remained still unbroken beyond the single surfpine. All the seabirds were sleeping in the sandhills. — ANTHONY PEARSON THE MANCHESTER (ENGLAND)

Court Order Barred In

Attica Case NEW YORK (AP) — Three justices of the U.S. Court of Appeals Friday for a second time refused to issue a court order barring the questioning of At-tica inmates about the recent prison riot iwhtout legal counsel being present. Last Friday the court took similar action. The panel sat in the U.S. Tax Court, 1 Federal Plasa, where it reconsidered an appeal from Sept. 27th decision of U.S. District Judge John F. Curtin in Buffalo.

The court reserved decision on other aspects of the appeal which were argued by Mrs. Phylis S. Bamberger, a Legal Aid Society attorney.

Mrs. Bamberger said the planned interrogations violated inmates' | constitutional rights. She said Vincent R. Mandusi, Attica superintendant had told his staff to give information obtained from inmates to Robert Fischer, deputy attorney general investigating the Barb spent seven weeks with the USYers in discussion groups, religious activities, traveling, and living in a number of different places. She lived in a varsity of accommodations ranging from student dorms and army-type barracks in a Kibbutz to nice hotels. The food was passable, but no one has the time, money or nothing to brag about. Breakfasts consisted of salad, cold state of the country and heart of the country in that high the police in herself and her religion. To touch the wall, which is the holiest shrine in Jerusalem, was a most remarkable wite duty.

Barbara's reactions? Before she went to the Promised Land, Barbara was afraid that her expectations were so high that she would be miserably disappointed. Fortunately, this was not the case. She found everything the people said about the beauty of the countryside and of the people to be true. In Jerusalem, while praying at the Walling Wall, she felt an overwhelming peace in herself and her religion. Baltimore is the one solid club in all basebal!

Three consecutive pennants are no fluke.

Earl Weaver has long made die-hard Baltimore fans forget Hank Bauer when he was given the ax as field manager three years ago.

The Orioles have the best pitching staff in baseball with four 20-or better game winners. The pitching is so strong that one of the 20-game winners, Pat Dobson, didn't even get into the American League divisional playoffs against the Oakland Athletics. The three Bird stariers, Dave McNaily, Mike Cuellar and Jim Palmer, all went the distance.

In this has been the case with Phil Hyde in his competitive tournament games against Martin Duke and each time he came up second best—that is, until last night. The former Manchester High the Orioles made it a clean wavep.

Baltimore is the one solid club in all basebal!

One wouldn't be surprised if the Orioles made it a clean wavep.

Baltimore will have another plus on its side, playing the first two games at home.

Upsets have happened before in World Series play, the most recent being the New York four games to one.

The Mets didn't have a chance, one thought, but some of the biggest upsets in series history.
