It is then averred that parents should arm their children in the home against pornographic materials. Yet these same people would be outraged by the open sale of narcotics, LED, etc., from a shop in the shadows of the movie house frequented by their children. No argument about home training against drug use would pacify their indignation.

Wherever pornography has been given a free hand, every other form of moral degeneracy has followed. No person's freedom is abridged by a limitation of commercial enterprises imposed by the majority for the moral good of the community.

On a winter's morning I rubbed the frost from the window and stared out at the fog. It was a day to remember good times, never immediately appreciated and not refundable. Once I would have leapt from bed full of enthusiasm and thought nothing of a 200-mile drive over icy roads to spend four or five hours cramped in a small boat hoping to catch ome fish. But time has eased enthusi sam. Sometimes I thought it had killed it entirely; except when the wind blew because I could never resist the wind. This morning the wind was blowing,

I set up my tackle. I was ready to go fishing when the sea was apparently unanother failure. It was stupid to venture out in high winds and it was stupid to pitch a tent in a badly exposed place with only a single low sheep wall b ring the Atlantic. I lay beneath the shaking, rattling canvas and attempted to read a book by the light of the swaying paraffin lamp. The book was "A Christmas Carol." I had read it on many previous occasions, but for the first time, influenced by an atmosphere of threat, whether real or imaginary did not matrent of horrid regret. I was watching the gulls when the bite came. It was like a distant memory from the past. I hit back and felt the sensation of tightness through my arm and chest, and relief and pride at my own prowess. The fish ran diagonally along the surf line and I ran after him, disturbing a cloud o faitting birds. The politburo in Hanoi is just as aware of these military facts of life as the Pentagon in Washington. The reason it is willing to expend precious supplies and crack troops in the central highlands is the impact any kind of Communist victory might have on the shaky U.S. Congress. Headlines about North Vietnamese troops capturing a provincial capital might reap rich benefits on Capitol Hill. This is what is truly behind the Communist military offensive now underway throughout Indoching. Strike at the weakest points of anti-Communist resistance, attempting to give the Congress in Washington the false impression that President Nixon's Vietnamisation policy is a colossal failure. Even more than embarrassing Mr. Nixon before his Feb. 21 journey to Peking, influencing Congress is Hanol's top goal. Such a priority represents a shift in Hanol's grand strategy. North Vietnam's leaders have soured on their ability to undermine the Nixon administration's support of the South Vietnamese government by working through American antiwar protestors. Now, they are concentrating on luting vital U.S. aid. That tactic requires some news from the battlefront sugesting an ultimate

Communist victory. The trouble, from Hanoi's standpoint, is that it cannot manage a successful military offensive in the rice-rich Mekong Delta or even in traditionally troublesome central Vietnam coastal provinces or along the demilitarized zone. Overall, the North Vietnamese military position has never been weaker, despite the now total

There's no question about it, we in the news profession have an unerring preference for the negative over the positive. Nor are we alone. The big headlines, in the Public Expenditure Council release, and in the subsequent news coverage, went to the fact that the payroll of the Genera Assembly for its own staff ha increased 76 per cent in the last decade, from 196 to 345, with the total payroll increasing from $443,477 to $1,442,281.

This showed the wicked, spendthrift politicians in a vulnerable light, up to their old perpetual tricks and ways with the public money, and pointed the proper and routine accusa-tory and monitory finger at them. But it did not chronicle anything that was particularly new or different. Dog bit man and nevertheless got the big

Before that, however, decay again infected the house of Han. A bloody revolt by a religious sect called the Yellow Turbans undermined the central authority of the government. Dowager empresses and palace cunuchs became the real powers behind the throne, which more often than not was occupied by a child—until he be-came old enough to be assassinated.

The corruption and cruelty of the eunuchs resulted in a general massacre of "the beard-less ones" by the military in A.D. 189 and

The Han dynasty finally ground to an end in A.D. 220. Yet so glorious had it been that Chinese long afterwards were to call them-selves Sons of Han. If for only one thing alone -its gift of paper to the world-it would de-serve to be remembered.

Ameche's title role in "The Story of Alexander Graham Bell" in 1939 has lived on to be his most remembered part. He still has people stop him on the street with "phone jokes" and he's been the brunt of many a comedian's barbs.

"I have no regrets about that film. It was an excellent and moving drama about a remarkable man," he said. "But it seems the public thinks I never did anything else. Fortunately, it's never hindered my career. I've done just about every kind of role imaginable but I do wish that seems market. that some were more memor-

Wesleyan Film Due on Ch. 24

A group of Wesleyan students in cooperation with Connecticut Public Television, are writing and producing a film on new approaches to learning on the university level.

The project, according to CPTV program manager Anders Yocom, is part of "the continuing creative involvement of Connecticut's noncommercial television network with college and universities in the state."

New courses at Wesleyan which offer a departure from conventional subjects and learning methods are being consider ed for the project. The courses include non-verbal communication, American Indian vocal music, a multi-media workshop, and a course of musical invest igation into the natrue of time.

The completed film will be shown on Channel 24 in Hart-
