The Big Blunder

There is often some point in the seemingly wasteful struggle of convention politics - the point deriving from the revelation of what tactics and weapons the various actors are willing, or foolish enough, to use.

Sometimes national figures measure themselves, unwittingly.

And if, by their own choice or acceptance of tactics, they blunder into a result which is the exact opposite of their intention, then, perhaps, it is fair to judge that the country didn't desperately need their service in any higher responsibility.

One of the great political blunders of our time has just met its poetic reward -a resounding defeat - at the Democratic National Convention.

It was the strategy by which the forces hoping to prevent the nomination of Senator McGovern attempted to take away from him more than half the votes he had won, by the rules of the California primary, in that primary.

This was a strategy which, however clever it may have seemed in a Machievellian sense, was certain to create a sympathy and an assistance for

As it worked out, it was the California test which inspired a large number of individual delegates, on their own, to separate themselves from their commitments to their own candidates in order to defeat the maneuver to which their own candidates had given themselves.

The result was that, in this one piece of strategy, Senators Humphrey and Muskie had not only measured themselves as men we didn't particularly need in the Presidency, but had given Senator McGovern a bigger boost toward the nomination than he might ever have been able to create for himself in the opening phase of the convention.

The deficiencies of Senators Humphrey and Muskie, in reaching for the California maneuver, do not translate themselves into pure McGovern virtues. It was indeed temptingly true that the California law which, in this instance, was working to Senator McGovern's benefit was the kind of law he could be depended upon to oppose in every other instance. And Senator McGovern himself was obviously drooling for a deal with the notorious Mayor Daley, no matter how wicked the system by which the Chicago delegates had been selected. But the more one acknowledges that politicians are politicians and candidates are candidates, the more one magnifies the blunder of which Senators Humphrey and Muskie were capable. There is, in politics, something even worse than certain softness in the realm of taste and principle. The worst crime of all is to be unperspicacious.

This Is A Test

This is announcing a test watch of the

One day this week, in a nameless American city, robbers after some petty cash met with some feeble resistance. In punishment for this, they inflicted a certain particular and unusual act of violence on their two victims. We do not wish to lend these columns to any additional publication of the details of their act of violence.

All we are going to do, here, is try to keep score, to see whether this is going to become another instance in which a savage practice, having occurred in one city, and having made the news, then proceeds to happen elsewhere. It has happened before, that one special kind of violence, once it gets into the news, repeats itself as other diseased minds decide it must be the latest fashion in cruelty. We hope we never read another instance of this particular new-old cruelty which happened this week. But if it is with this as it had been with other such grisly novelties, the same kind of act will be committed again and perhaps again in the weeks ahead. It there is a score, we'll keep track.

Decision On The Death Penalty The Supreme Court's decision last week abolishing capital punishment throughout the United States was one of reasoned opinions on a major issue in In the first place, the decision was by a bare 5-to-4 majority. The four justices appointed by President Nixon were in the minority. The holdover justices con-

When lesser issues are decided by 5-to 4 decisions, perhaps no great harm is done. When an issue as serious and as emotionally wrenching as capital punishment is decided 5 to 4, the decision is less than satisfactory.

Not even the five justices in the majority could agree among themselves. Three of them found that capital punish ment as such violated the Eighth Amendment prchibition against crue and unusual punishment." The other two argued that the present system of nsing justice makes capital punishment "cruel and unusual" because t makes it uncertain and capricious, but that, under certain conditions, capita punishment might be constitutional. Confusion was not confined to the majority; all four of the dissenters filed The fact that the justices themselves were not clear on the question is indicated by the extraordinary length of their combined opinions — 243 pages in all. Some of the greatest and most far-reaching opinions in the history of the court have been reached in a very few pages. When nine men need 243 pages to explain what they are talking about, something s wrong. It signifies confusion and un-ertainty in their own minds. Finally, some of the arguments advanced by the majority seem palpably For example, Justice William J. Brennan Jr. admitted that the framers of the Constitution did not mean to outlaw the leath penalty when they forbade "cruel and unusual punishment." But he said imes had changed, and the Constitution should change with it. But that can be a dangerous argument. What it amounts to is that Bren nan does not consider himself bound by the Constitution. The Constitution, in his view, can be made to mean whatever he would like to have it mean.

Brennan also said:

"The function of these principles is to enable a court to determine whether a punishment comports with human digni-Death, quite simply, does not." The average person will be baffled by the reference to "human dignity." Is an injured society bound by the Constitution to protect the "human dignity" of a murderer? Such words, such a concept, de not appear in the Constitution. And how about life imprisonment? Does that protect "human dignity"? It could be argued that death is much more "dignified" than a lifetime spent behind bars virtual ly as a slave. Certainly, many men have

Justice Thurgood Marshall rejected the death penalty because he found that it most frequently fell upon blacks, the poor and ignorant and the underprivileg ed. He found this "morally unaccept

But is it the function of a Supreme Court justice to tell American citizens what is "morally unacceptable." Citizens are entitled to make their own moral judgments. It is the function of the justices to tell us what the Constitution says and means. Marshall did what he had no business to do. The court's confused, unsatisfactory and ill-reasoned opinion cannot be allowed to stand. State legislators and Congress should take the hint offered by two of the majority justices and frame penal laws that will stand the scrutiny of the court Eventually - perhaps quite soon another vacancy may appear on the high court. The next appointee should be a man who will, through his vote on the court, allow the states to impose capital punishment if their people wish, and brough the power of his mind and the clarity of his argument, persuade hi brothers on the high court of the rightness of his position. - ANSONIA out as a decorative centerpiec is causing quite a splash.

Located in the foyer of Mc-Donald's at 46 W. Center St., the flower-surrounded fountain was installed when the restaurant was remodeled recently. "People started tossing coins into the fountain, possibly making a wish at the same time, chael Waish, owner, said. "When we noticed how the coins were accumulating, we decided to donate the money to the nstructors of the Handicapped about $3 a day until we put up a sign informing patrons that he proceeds would be donated to the IOH, Now, contributions have nearly doubled," he said, The fountain, bird bath in size, is emptied twice a day. "It's a little fountain," Walsh explained, "and the coins accumulate so fast we are afraid it will clog up the drain." With an estimated 12,000 people served at this restaurant annually. Walsh is hopeful contrioutions will continue to grow. While there is no guarantee oins tossed into the fountain vill make dreams come true, patrons can be assured that the freams of some of the handicapped will be a little closer o becoming a reality.

Better Mousetrap

"Build a better mousetrap," said Raiph Waldo Emerson, "and the

But the United States Patent Office is not so easily impressed. If your mousetrap is better merely because it is made of better mate ials, you probably could not get a patent. It must also work in a new and better way.

For example: A man came up with the idea of making towel holders out of plastic rather than metal. The plastic holders did have certain dvantages. They were cheaper, for one thing. They were also more colorful. But these advantages of plastic were already well known. Simply applying them to another product was held not original enough to jualify for a patent. Even if the change of material means added convenience, that usually won't do. Another woulde inventor put together a map case of lightweight metal, making it easier to carry. But again, a court found no basis for a patent. "(The lightness) may prove beneficial," said the court, "but it is not invention. There must be original thought or inventive skill not mere mechanical change of what was old." On the other hand, a change of material might actually change the way the product functions. Take the matter of garter buttons. Originally made out of metal, garter buttons had two major drawbacks. If the clasp was tight, the stocking had a tendency to tear. If the clasp was loose, the stocking had a tendency to slip. someone finally hit upon the idea of making the button out o rubber. This solved both problems at once. Stockings neither tore button gripped the fabric in a new and better way. Did this change of material entitle the man to a patent? A court "It is this capacity for accom-

TV Computers Trailing in Early Returns; Or: One Vote for Election Night Suspense

By DICK KLEINER

HOLLYWOOD-(NEA)-Every election year, I get mad at computers. The other three years, I can take them or leave them alone, but in election years I wish their memory banks would get a short in their forget-me-nots. Elections used to be exciting affairs. You'd sit up all night, keeping track of the state returns as they trickled You'd never know for sure what was going to happen. But now the computers figure it all out so early in the evening that you can even get a good night's sleep, and you go to bed vaguely dissatisfied with the whole process. So I suggested to CBS' Bill Leonard and NBC's Frank McGee that it would be nice and in the public interest if the networks voluntarily gave up computerized election

They laughed at me. "No way," said McGee. And Leonard even got a little annoyed at the suggestion computers were honorably retired "We're not in the business of giving viewers fun," he said. "Our job is to give the news, calmly and clearly, without attempting to make it entertainment. The faster we can give the results, the better we've done our job.' So it looks like we're stuck with the computers again for this year's conventions and election. And once more there will be about as much suspense on election night especially when I said that it would be more fun if the

as there is in an episode of Here's Lucy. Actually, to be fair about it, I think that Leonard, who is CBS News' senior vice-president, has a good point when he says TV news shouldn't be in the entertainment business. The problem is that many of his colleagues don't There are a lot of TV newscasters who appear to consider themselves comics first, journalists second. And, unfortunately, many TV news programs are designed so regardless of their news value.

Leonard says that the TV coverage of this year's conventions—the Democratic one in July, the Republicans late in August-will be different from those in previous years, although the viewers may not notice that differ He says CBS has had to cut the size of its convention staff down about 15 or 20 per cent, because of the high

"The '68 convention," he says, "cost us about twice as much to cover as the '64 convention, and this one would have cost twice as much again. We had to stop somewhere. The costs of everything have gone up-not only personnel, but building and equipment and everything-and it just got too expensive." He says they began experimenting in '68 and found they could do the same job with fewer people.

"We don't need to leave four cameras in a candidate's suite," he said. "We can leave one camera and, if we need to, rush one or two mobile units there in a hurry." All the networks begin working on election night coverage the day after the previous national election. It's the biggest thing on a network's news agenda. "Election night," Leonard says, "is the most important event for a network news department. If I ever had to make a choice between giving up something, giving up coverage of the primaries or the convention or election night, I'd stick with election night.

Brian Cooke of England piloted his 59-foot ketch British Steel across the finish line early today - the fourth person to complete the Transatlantic single handed yacht race in less than 26 days. Cooke, the first Englishman to complete this year's race, crossed the finish line at Brenton Reef Light Tower here at 2:30 a.m. on the 26th day, a spokesman for the race's spon-sor, the London Observer, said. Tuesday, Frenchman Jean-Marie Vidal joined two other country men in completing the 3,000 mile crossing. Vidal crossed the finish line at 1 p.m. EDT in the 52-foot Cap 33. The record for crossing - 21 days — was set last Friday when Alain Colas piloted his 70foot trimaran Pen Duick IV across the line. He was followed into port some 15 hours later by fellow Frenchman Jean Yves Terlain at the helm of the 8-foot schooner Vendredi 13, the largest yacht in the race. HOME RUN SPREE—Bob Kowalski, generally ac knowledged as the No. 1 hitter in area slow pitch softball, didn't hurt his reputation any last weekend at Fitzgerald Field. The Colchester slugger collected four homers in as many trips in the first game, added a fifth in his first at bat in the second and then drew nothing but walks with Groman's Sports Shop in the Silk City League. Walks cut out homers.
