of the matter, the fact that Senator Thomas Eagleton has undergone paychiatric treatment on three occasions is in itself less significant than the fact that this seemingly good and pleasant man makes his painful disclosures after instead of before his acceptance of the nomination for Vice President.

The harsh, but fair, verdict has to say that he owed it to the man who was asknominating him, to let them decide, before their commitment to him had become public, whether his own medical history made any difference to them. This failure to be totally candid with

There is always a question whether the military results of the bombing equal the damage done to the one who bombs. Strategic bombing in World War II was found, after the war, to have been the most expensive and least productive way of waging war.
