Bookmaking Said Booms In Boston

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Globe, reporting results of a four-month investigation, said yesterday in a copyrighted story that illegal bookmaking 'is a booming and brazen busiess in Boston."

The newspaper said its investigation by a team of reporters and photographers documented illegal gambling "in virtually every corner of the city ... within sight of the State House, City Hall and police headquarters." "They are taking bets in bars and taverns, nondescript storefronts, abandoned buildings, pizza parlors, restaurants, drugstores and neighborhood variety stores," The Globe said. "And they are doing it, certain cases, with the apparent knowledge and sanc-tion of police and other public officials. "Reports last Saturday of a

are back. Partly in reaction to the excesses of the. erformance race, billions of iollars of these traditionally conservative securities are being snapped up by individuals and pension funds. The turn, which gradually has been gaining momentum since 1969, is in marked contrast to the heady days of the 1950s and 1960s, when anyone who sat on onds when he could ride with stocks was considered a Ironically, the turn came at about the same time that message was being relayed to colleges and other nonprofit institutions by the Ford Foundation, which said they could protect themselves by becoming more aggressive, performance minded investors. In effect, these institutions were told to get off their assets and to seek the bigger returns available in stocks. Backing this advice was a University of Chicago study showing equity investments averaged 9 per cent between 1926-1964. Then came the 1969-70 market debacle in which many high flyers dived to earth, some so hard they haven't yet dug themselves out. The trend to bonds might already have begun, but the collapse of stocks added momentum. From 1946 to 1965, according to figures supplied by Channing Management Corp., the investing public added almost no bonds to their savings. But purchases in 1969 exceeded sales by $5 million.

Martin E. Segal, president of Wertheim Asset Management Service and an authority on pensions, notes that bonds in pension portfolios fell from 45 per cent in 1955 to 27 per cent in 1970, while stock holdings jumped from 30 per cent to 59 er cent.

Not only has the trend been arrested, but Segal now maintains that bonds yield as much as stocks. "A good bond portfolio under the care of a competent bond manager could come close to or equal the 50year average yield of the stock market," he states flatly.

Pension funds are for the long term, he explains. A sustainable yield is more important than a fluctuating yield, especially since annual costs are based on yield for the year. 'If the return is volatile, your costs are volatile."

of bonds is the development of bond funds - mutual funds with portfolios. Last year investors bought more than $1 billion worth of them, a figure likely to e topped in 1973.

One aspect of the re-valuation

As an example of the trend, Channing began a bond fund a little more than a year ago and
