Nutmeggers Begin Efforts To Conserve Energy

By The Associated Press
Lights are going out and indoor temperatures and driving speeds are going down as Connecticut tries to get through a winter that may last longer than fuel supplies.

In Hartford, the traditional "Festival of Light" on Constitution Plaza will be extinguished. William Libman, chairman of the Retail Trade Bureau, said Friday.

The announcement came two days after President Nixon and Gov. Thomas J. Meskill appeared on television to ask for cooperation in preserving energy supplies which appear insufficient to meet normal demand.

The Retail Trade Bureau also said decorations on downtown light poles will not be lit this year. Some businesses in downtown Hartford also agreed to keep outdoor Christmas

Baha'is Mark Date of Birth

The Baha'is of Manchester will join with millions of co-religionists around the world in observing the 156th anniversary of the birth of Bah'u'll'ah, prophet and founder of the Baha'i faith, on Tuesday.

The Manchester Baha'i Community will celebrate the holy day, Sunday with a children's party at 9:45 a.m. at the Meadows Convalescent Home, Bidwell St. Prayers and songs will be followed by the breaking of a pinata and refreshments. Anyone interested in attending the observance may contact Mrs. Barbara Washington, 646-6851.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of Gerald Sullivan, who passed away November 10, 1968.
Without the love you left us,
We'd never find the way
Through ups and downs and memories

Our hearts are filled with love,
We'll meet again, I'm sure of this
On higher grounds above.

decorations dark, the bureau said.

An official of the Chamber of Commerce said turning off downtown Christmas lights would not save large amounts of energy. But he said it is important for the chamber and businessmen to set an example for the region.

Libman said the decision to cancel the "Festival of Light" was difficult because the display attracted customers to downtown merchants in the past.

Spokesmen for banks and insurance companies in downtown Hartford say they also will have their lights shut off as soon as cleaning and maintenance crews finish their work. In many cases, lights have been left on all night.

In Berlin, a pharmacist said he was turning off half the lights in his store and called for local and New Britain businessmen to "all join together in the fight to save energy" by following his example.

Government and private buildings throughout the state also will be cooler.

Mayor Abraham Grossman of Meriden said thermostats will be lowered in City Hall offices and "we'll just have to wear sweaters."

In Waterbury, Malcolm Baldrige, board chairman and chief executive of Scovill Manufacturing Co., said the company will lower temperatures in factories and warehouses to 58 to 60 degrees from an average of 65 to 68 and in offices to 68 from an average of 72.

Schools also are being affected by the energy situation. In Berlin's seven public schools, temperatures have been lowered for several weeks, according to Supt. Edward Rogaan.

"The teachers have been complaining, but we've told them that we all have to do our part, as the President said," he said.

There has been talk of revising school schedules in several communities, but no final actions have been announced.

Visit Two Libraries During Children's Book Week!

Poster created by Margot Zemach for the 1973 Children's Book Week, sponsored by The Children's Book Council, Inc., 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y.

The Book Council is made up of publishers and other people interested in better books for children.

The National Library

Let's celebrate Children's Book Week by visiting the library that holds the world's largest collection of children's as well as adult books, the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

The Library of Congress collection is huge, because since 1870, publishers have had to deposit two copies of each book printed if they want it copyrighted. That means they register the book so no one can print the same thing without their permission. Even before 1870, writers sent their books to the Library.

The Library's collection has some 100,000 children's books in addition to thousands of magazines, periodicals and pamphlets. Children's films and records are stored in a special section.

It also has a good collection of old and rare children's books.

Children's books in foreign languages are included. The Library takes part in a book exchange program with other countries.

Children's Book Week streamer is by illustrator Martha Alexander.

The Library of Congress is the national library for the United States. Its main purpose is to do research work for the members of Congress. It shares its collection with the public for research purposes and houses both the adult and children's collections.

Your School Library

The average price of a children's book today is $4.37. With prices so high, libraries where you can borrow books are even more important.

The books in your school library were probably paid for by state, local and federal funds. Federal funds are those raised by the U. S. government in Washington from the federal taxes people pay.

There has been a sudden "cutback" in the amount of money the federal government is giving libraries. A "cutback" means that the amount of money has been cut down or cut out.

Due to the cutback and the fact that libraries didn't know exactly how much money to expect from federal funds, there will probably be fewer new books on your school library shelf. There will be fewer new film strips and other audio visual materials. Public libraries have also had to reduce the amount of money they spend on salaries, so there will be fewer services offered.

There is an interest in books about minority races.

There is an explosion in the paperback book business.

A book report on the Caldecott Winner

"The Funny Little Woman," illustrated by Blair Lent and retold by Arlene Mosel, published by E. P. Dutton, is the 1973 Caldecott book.

Below is a book report by Cheryl Smith, a second grader from Raleigh, N.C.

"One day, the funny little Japanese woman was making nice dumplings. A dumpling rolled into a hole. The hole started getting bigger. The woman fell through. The wicked oni (strange looking creatures) found her. They gave her a magic paddle to cook rice dumplings for them. One day the funny little woman ran home with the magic paddle. She made rice dumplings and sold them. She became the richest woman in Japan."

Blair Lent, the author, won the 1973 Caldecott medal for this book. This medal is awarded to the outstanding American illustrator of a children's book.

"The pictures are colorful and pretty. I liked the story and the pictures."

A book report on the Newbery Award Winner

"Julie of the Wolves," by Jean George, published by Harper and Row, is the 1973 Newbery Award book.

Here is a review by fifth-grader Cynthia Smith of Raleigh, N.C.

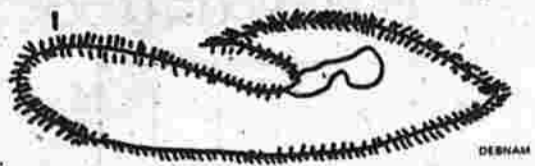

"A 13-year old girl named Julie was lost in the Arctic Tundra. She was running away to San Francisco where her pen pal, Amy Pollock, lived. Julie learned to use her wits and her instincts. She learned to live with the wolves that helped her get food and survive."

The book was sad in parts, especially when she recalled her parents dying. The many facts about Alaska, the Eskimos and how she prepared for her journey to San Francisco were interesting."

Jean George, the author, won the 1973 Newbery medal awarded yearly to the most outstanding children's author. Newbery books are for children from the fifth grade up. Both awards are presented by the Children's Services Division of the American Library Association.

Animal of the Week: ^{T.M.}

The Paramecium

The paramecium is so small that it can be seen only under a microscope. A full grown paramecium is about 1,250th of an inch long. Its body is transparent and it is shaped something like a shoe. It lives in still water that is around 80 degrees. The paramecium eats other one-celled organisms such as algae and bacteria. It has short hairs surrounding its body and uses these hairs to make a current in the water and sweep food into its "mouth." New animals are usually produced from one parent. The parent cell simply divides in two. Because it is such a simple animal, it is often studied in biology classes.

Mini Do: ^{T.M.} Crayon Etching

What you'll need:

- scissors with a point, or a big nail
- squares of poster or shirt board or cardboard

What to do:

1. Spread newspapers on your desk so you won't get crayon on it.
2. Using your light colored crayons, put five layers of crayon on your board. Cover it heavily!
3. Then add a final layer of black, very heavy, covering all the board.
4. Using the double point of your scissors or a big nail, scratch out your design.
