Rham
To Study at Grenoble
 ANNE EMT
 Mrs. Pauline Straight, department coordinator of foreign languages at Rham High School, has been chosen by the American Association of Teachers of French as one of 20 career teachers of French nationwide for a three-week program of study this July at the University of Grenoble in France.

This is not Mrs. Straight's first award. She previously received a National Defense Education Act Fellowship and a reward from the French government for proficiency in the language.

A teacher at Rham for 11 years, Mrs. Straight, which "prefers teaching French" even though she is also certified in English, drama, and American literature. She has also studied German and "picked-up" some Spanish.

Mrs. Straight is the only teacher in the state who is receiving this award and the school has received a letter from her fellow French teachers in the state offering their "warmest congratulations."

In the letter, Dr. Symond Yavener, President of the Connecticut Chapter of the American Association of Teachers of French, congratulates the school in "having a staff member among the twenty national winners of the Grenoble Scholarships made available by the French government."

The letter further acknowledges Mrs. Straight as being "recognized as a fine teacher and department head at Rham and both our state and national committee are very proud of her accomplishments."

In conclusion, Dr. Yavener states "confident that as a result of her study in France this summer, Mrs. Straight will be in an even better position to enrich the offerings of your school."

A graduate of Bates College in Maine, Mrs. Straight has been a resident of Manchester since 1948. She resides with her husband Charles at 109 Coleman Rd.

The Straights have two children, Stephen, who is a student at Bates and Susan (Mrs. Bottaro), a resident of Bolton and an artist.

Rham Budget Approved

ANNE EMT
 Correspondent Tel. 228-3971

In spite of the controversy, it was apparent from the discussion on the tennis courts that there was sufficient support to pass the budget because of the inclusion of this item.

Several years ago, the inclusion of this same item by the regional board had caused the rejection of a regional budget.

Because of controversy over a $48,000 proposed expenditure for tennis courts and the Central Office Committee (COC) budget which had never been brought before the public for a hearing, this year's budget meeting varied slightly from routine in that every voter had to register before entering the meeting hall. Then only those with voters cards were permitted to vote.

Those in favor of the courts stressed the necessity for a well-rounded physical education program for students as well as a well-rounded educational program.

Opponents felt that priority should be placed "on basic education before you make it a well-rounded education" and lauded the added maintenance costs and added supervision as well as possible "overuse" by adults.

COC
 As was the case with the budget hearing, the COC budget was again the subject of much questioning.

This time, however, the public was successful in getting a complete breakdown of the budget even though there was no discussion on any particular items.

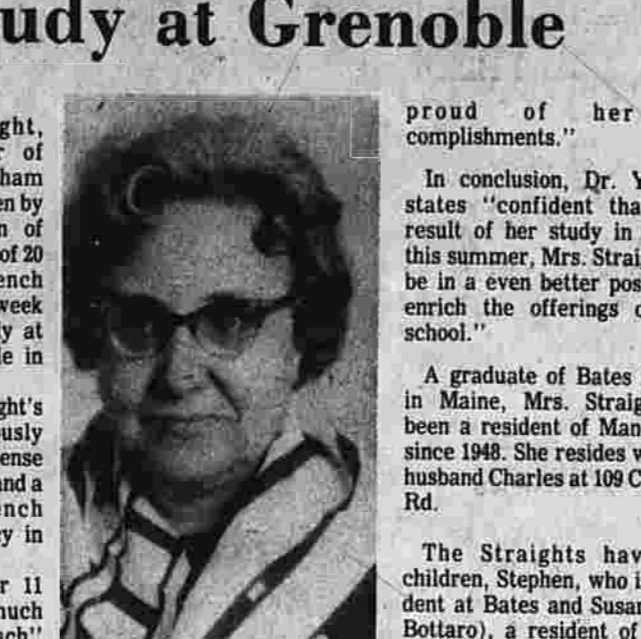

With the COC budget, salaries for the superintendents are determined by the COC (composed of two members of each of the local boards of education as well as two regional members) and the boards are appropriated their share.

It was felt that residents in the three towns should have an opportunity to hear this budget at a public hearing as the total budget amounts to $85,000.

Levy
 With the passing of the budget, Andover will pay $372,519, Hebron $333,699 and Marlborough $512,841. The remainder will be covered by estimated revenues.

However, these figures still are not secure in that figures presented in the adopted budget for teachers salaries are estimated on the basis of a 4 per cent increase which includes increments.

Final figures for salaries will not be arrived at until the teacher-board negotiations are completed.

Lake St. Repair Discussed
 MONICA SHEA
 Correspondent Tel. 742-9495

At Monday night's Town Council meeting the realignment and repair of Lake St. near Monument Hill was discussed during the audience of citizens.

The town has received a preliminary plan from the state engineering department that calls for realigning the curves in the area and removing two feet from the hill.

This would be done for about $45,000 if town employees do the work.

Residents of the area said that this small amount of work would not clear up the problems and asked again that signs be installed in the area and that the road be repaired.

The council will walk the sight Saturday to get a better grasp of the road condition.

Frank Fund, chairman of the Conservation Commission, was concerned that the blazings in the area would do to the Nathan Hale monument and to foundations of the older residences on Lake St.

Other Actions
 The council deferred action on the Bicentennial Commission request to use the old town hall on Main St. as an informational center and headquarters for the duration of the bicentennial until the commission and the town manager can come up with cost estimates for installing adequate plumbing and other repairs necessary to make the building usable.

The commission has agreed to install a new ceiling and to paint the building.

Allen Sandberg, town manager, reported to the council that the rate of use of the landfill, the town would have to secure additional land within 3 to 3½ years as the landfill is being used much more rapidly than anticipated.

Townsmen are being asked to separate all metals and these will be sold as scrap metal.

The council received a letter from the Department of Environmental Protection saying that the state would not reduce the number of parking sites at the state boat launches. The town had requested this in an attempt to reduce the overcrowding on the lake in the summer.

The council sent a letter to the Windham Regional Planning Agency stating that the town would consider joining a transit district in the future.

Energy Challenge

The state is going to have a permanent energy office. Under the terms of legislation enacted recently, the new office will have a dual function. First, it will have broad emergency powers to deal with an energy crisis such as the one last winter when Gov. Thomas Meskill created the office by executive order. Second, it is charged with creating an advisory board to project the state's energy needs over the next two decades.

It is this latter function which may prove to be the most important part of the act.

In projecting energy needs, the group will inevitably come to grips with sources of energy and perhaps even the sticky question of economic growth itself.

There is growing concern, not only in Connecticut but elsewhere in this nation, that growth in itself may not always be good. There is concern that the quality of life be evaluated along with considerations of more jobs, industry diversification, and other economic goals.

That energy, or rather its consistent availability is a key to any growth, is not the question. The question which the advisory group will have to face in its studies may well be energy priorities assigned to certain types of growth as opposed to other types.

Inherent in energy conservation is the efficient use of energy and this also opens up many questions. We face it in an early decision regarding mass transit, for example.

To what extent can we allocate funds to autos and trucks but still stop and reverse the trend away from railroad and bus use by shippers and passengers?

If we assume that our energy needs are going to be met, it must be assumed new energy will be available only at a higher cost. Then we can assume the energy group will have to consider the economic affects of policies as well as goals.

Therefore it would appear this advisory committee's input must come from all state agencies and the private sector as well.

If we are to keep the state competitive in the national economy, efficient allocation of energy supplies may become necessary. If we are to maintain air and water quality where it now meets acceptable standards and improve it where it does not, certain fuels may have to be restricted to such uses where it is most efficiently controlled from the environmental sense.

As can be seen, the task is more than projecting an "X" percentage of new kilowatts, barrels of residual fuel oil, or gallons of gasoline and diesel fuel. The task is really one of correlating our energy needs against existing and potential sources; then determining the ultimate use of those fuels within the state in the manner which best meets the state's economic, health and aesthetic aspirations.

It will be a big job but Connecticut can and should lead the way. This problem is shared by our neighboring states. In view of the limited sources of fossilized fuels in this world, the question also will face all the nation eventually.

We have an opportunity to meet the challenge of meeting our energy needs; at the same time using that energy more efficiently and using it within the context of a broader horizon than the mere ending of periodic shortages.

To borrow from an old conservation slogan, we must utilize our energy resources for greatest good, for the greatest number, for the longest time.

Is There A Ford In Reagan's Future?

New survey of GOP leaders in a dozen states shows California's Gov. Ronald Reagan, symbol to many of the purest conservatism, is a very live 1976 presidential prospect. Yet he is seriously menaced by Vice President Ford's rise in the presence of the picture. No one could be surprised that any run-through on Reagan finds him easily the sentimental favorite of the Old South, and of sizable parts of the Midwest, Plains and Mountain states. In these areas and other presumably less hospitable sectors, like the Northeast, he has been busy in recent months pleasing audiences with his old platform flair.

Most Republican politicians I tapped at their recent party gatherings here were going on the basis of their own soundings. They tend to dismiss as unrepresentative a formal poll of GOP county chairmen giving Reagan a substantial lead over Ford and still bigger margins over such other assumed 1976 contenders as Nelson Rockefeller and Sen. Charles Percy.

Nevertheless, from every region party spokesmen quickly indicated that Ford's entry into the 1976 contest (if he is first postulated that he is not already president as a consequence of President Nixon's impeachment), either neutralizes Reagan or nearly wipes him out in his strongest balliwicks.

Southerners, for instance, tell me without hesitation that Ford, barring some damaging stumble in the meantime, would automatically have commanding acceptability in these states. An Alabama leader indicated the Vice President likely would shooe Reagan right out of the ballpark — where he is cheered today.

Speak of Reagan as an individual political entity to politicians from Wisconsin, Indiana and even Ford's own Michigan (mindful always of his heavy mix of Wallace-type voters), and you get an upbeat reading. But add Ford's name to the developing 1976 broth and expressions and utterances change instantly.

It's not news, of course, that you don't get accolades for Reagan when you talk to leaders in places like Maine, Massachusetts, New York and New Jersey.

What does strike you with force is how comfortable the pro-Reagan elements suggest they could be very likely would turn their full allegiance to Gerald Ford if he became the avowed candidate he still insists right now that he will be.

Why this is so may be a fairly complex question.

Ford is of course widely perceived as a clean man and thus appeals broadly to conservatives accustomed to charging the Democrats with

Jury Of The Whole

NEW YORK — More than a year later, Richard Nixon has dropped the other shoe. The Congress and the nation could well decide that it was in fact a cover-up, on the basis of the transcripts themselves. Or they could decide to give the President the benefit of the doubt. Each side will make its own interpretation of the same material.

So will the people. The second thing about Mr. Nixon's move is that it has broadened the jury sitting in judgment on him, going over the heads of the transcripts to the people themselves. By strategy of opening everything to the public or almost everything — he has moved the fulcrum from the House Judiciary Committee to a kind of Committee of the Whole — a jury of the whole where his cause is likely to be more secure.

"The Judiciary Committee is of course feeling angry and frustrated at the put-down, yet there is little it can do. It is hard to fault a President for telling the people too much and Congress not enough.

It is not enough in the view of many on the committee because its staff and members, except for the two top-ranking members, won't be able to listen to the nuances of voice on the tapes, nor examine the tapes themselves. Yet I doubt whether this is ground enough for the committee to make a fight on. There is a widespread belief among the people that the staff has had too great a role thus far, and the members themselves too little.

Giving the case, in effect, to the people themselves may turn out to be the President's most brilliant strategic move. It can't help affecting their judgment. And in the end, their judgment may well end up as the judgment of Congress itself, which is an agency of the people. It is hard for waters to rise above their source.

There will be a period of great confusion as the meaning of various passages in the transcript is debated before the court of public opinion. But it will be debate on a text in being available to anyone willing to take the trouble to read it — all 308 pages of it. Differences of interpretation of the same text will rage, in what may turn out to be the greatest of the great debates of our time, making the debate over the Pentagon Papers seem puny by comparison.

The Nixon Papers will shed a brutal light on Mr. Nixon's own language, methods, motives, values. That is part of the price the President will pay for his last desperate effort to hold on to the presidency.

No President in American history has ever had to strip himself so nakedly before his contemporaries and before history. It will shed anything but a flattering light on his character. But that has little to do with guilt or innocence before the law. You impeach a man not for his character but for his deeds. That, too, is part of the nature of American democracy.

Dignity In Politics

WASHINGTON — In the matter of impeachment proceedings against President Nixon, it is well to remember that there are wild men among Democrats and Republicans in the House who for both partisan and personal reasons will do their best to sabotage an orderly and dignified examination of the issue.

But having stated that caveat, we the people have reason to be reassured by — and even take pride in — the conduct of the House Judiciary Committee on both sides of the aisle. There have been political squabbles and even heated exchanges, but by and large the committee as a whole has approached its job with the solemnity and even-handed common sense it demands.

Much of the credit belongs to Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., until a few months ago a member of Rodino's fairness is the criticism to which he has been subjected by some members of his own party, who prefer more hellfire and brimstone in an election year. Rodino has done a superb job against these agitators and deserves their gratitude.

In his leading role, Rodino has had both active and moral support from the committee's ranking Republican, Edward

End of an Era: Reddy Fired

One of the things about nostalgia we don't like is that sometimes we get jolted with the idea that Old Father Time is catching up with us.

Take, for example, the recent announcement by Northeast Utilities that it is firing Reddy Kilowatt, that cartoon character whose body looks like bolts of lightning and his head is a light bulb.

Used as a symbol by the private utility industry in its advertising and other promotional materials, Reddy's dismissal marks the end of an era.

Some of us remember that the big battle between public and private power even involved Reddy. The Rural Electric Co-ops were not to be outdone and came up with a similar cartoon character wearing a hard hat and dubbed Willy Wirehand whose goal was to promote electric use on farms and in other non-electrified areas of the nation, not served by private utilities.

Reddy's creators went to court and lost a copyright infringement suit.

Whether it was coincidence or a presaging of things to come, the battle of public vs. private power began to wane about the same time.

As we are now faced with the more important task of meeting an ever increasing electric demand in the face of limited and more costly sources, the issue seems like it took place so long ago.

Perhaps Willy is still holding down his job in the West where he was more popular but we fear too that he may become unemployed as it is no longer popular to promote more use of electricity, public or private.

But whatever happens, we would hope that neither Reddy Kilowatt nor Willy Wirehand wind up in some Senior Citizens Center playing cards by candlelight.

Thought

Perhaps you have noticed this spring that if the bud of a flower is injured by hostile forces, it will not open. So, too, a human person who is without the warm encouragement of love, it will remain closed on in himself.
