Police roundup
Man arrested in fight at cafe
Police Saturday arrested a man who, after interfering with town medics working on a heart attack victim, jumped and fought a police officer, they said Monday.

Douglas Scruton, 29, of 633 South Main St., was charged with assault on a police officer, breach of peace, and interfering with a police officer. He was released on a $2,500 bond for a Manchester Superior Court appearance June 30.

In describing the incident, police said they were dispatched to the Gaslight Cafe on 38 Oak St. for a fight. On arrival, they found a man, Scruton, who was interfering with town medics working on a heart attack victim. Scruton and another man were forcibly pulling medics away from the victim.

The officer went in and asked the two men to leave, but they refused. One man said he had finished his beer, according to police. Another man, Bruce W. Coburn, 20, of 18 Lilley St., later charged with disturbing the peace in the incident, then came over and asked the two men to leave. A fight broke out between Coburn and Scruton's partner, and the officer then tried to break up the fight.

But Scruton grabbed the officer from behind and tried to wrestle him to the ground. The officer had to use his blackjacks to subdue Scruton, and meanwhile, the other man, police said.

Police said warrants will be sought for the arrest of the other man.

Coburn was released on a $100 bond for a court date June 20.

Warrants served
Police this weekend arrested Scott Pinckney, 19, of 148 North School St., on a warrant charging third-degree larceny and two counts of third-degree burglary, according to police Monday.

Pinckney was presented in court Thursday.

Friday, in an unrelated arrested, police served a warrant on a Vernon man charging criminal mischief and disorderly conduct. Kelley, 25, of Vernon, was charged with first-degree criminal mischief and disorderly conduct. Kelley was presented in court Friday.

Gambling charged
Two men will appear in Manchester Superior Court June 16 to face gambling charges.

The two, Michael Burdick, 27, and John Dadiskos, 35, both of Manchester, were arrested Monday by the Statewide Organized Crime Investigative Task Force of the state.

Both were released on written promises to appear in court.

Spokesman John McLeod said the arrests were part of an ongoing investigation by the task force, dating back to earlier this year when search and seizure warrants were issued for illegal sports betting activities in Manchester, Terryville and New Britain.

Burdick was charged with five counts of using a telephone to receive and record gambling information and one count of possession of gambling records.

Dadiskos was accused of one count of conspiracy to commit professional gambling and one count of using a telephone to receive and record gambling information.

Three Coventry residents blast proposal for garage

By Sarah E. Hohl
Herald Correspondent

COVENTRY — With loud voices and strident protests, three residents — John Twery, Roland Green, and Robert Olmstead — defied the town garage proposal at a special town meeting Monday night.

The rest of the 38-old residents attending appeared to favor the town garage proposal for a $232,000 garage package at the site of the old Bearce Company on Brandybury Lane, in the South Village area. An existing 10,000 square foot, concrete block building would house town trucks and highway equipment on the 1.6 acre site.

"We're in a dump now," said Twery of the current garage, "and we're going to move to another dump. If we buy that piece of property down there, I think we're going in the wrong direction."

Twery went on to predict the Bearce property would meet the same fate at the hands of voters as the recent sewer proposal. "The garage proposal will go to referendum June 14, outside firm set the value at $185,000."

Olmstead also claimed — in spite of Holmes' insistence to the contrary — that the Bearce property is too close to Mill Stream, which might be polluted by road sand and salt. He went on to point out that highway trucks would have to travel a long distance from the center of town.

Coventry council OKs computer service pact

COVENTRY — In an attempt to modernize town payroll and record-keeping systems, Town Council members approved at Monday night meeting a plan to sign a three-year computer contract with the Town of Mansfield.

Under the terms of the contract, Coventry will hook into Mansfield's computer processing unit via telephone, at a cost of $12,000 per year.

It will cost about $2,900 per year to maintain the system, which will provide information on employee salaries, benefits, and other personnel data. The town will also receive training for its staff at a cost of $1,000 for first year, and $1,000 or less in subsequent years.

Pinckney was presented in court Thursday.

Friday, in an unrelated arrested, police served a warrant on a Vernon man charging criminal mischief and disorderly conduct. Kelley, 25, of Vernon, was charged with first-degree criminal mischief and disorderly conduct. Kelley was presented in court Friday.

Gryk says condos better than single-family homes

Arguing for the Ferguson, single-family homes, he said that the density of the proposed housing was allowed by the zoning ordinance rather than a simple majority.

He said the lawn was "a unique area in a historical district" with a heritage which must be preserved. A question whether this commission was prepared to destroy that heritage, Thomas said.

He said Gryk had used similar arguments to his own when he argued in 1977 against a development by the South Methodist Church on the south side of Hartford Road.

Gryk said in his rebuttal what while the arguments may have seemed similar the proposals differed because the church plan called for 100 units.

Judge Fitzgerald, following Thomas, said in his testimony there was no point in having created the district if the whole area could not be preserved.

The world of rock talks back to the recession

By Mark Schwed
United Press International

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Love conquers all, even double-digit unemployment, in Barbara Mandrell's bluesy song "In Times Like These."

A punk group called The Dead Kennedys takes a decidedly different approach in the song "Kill the Poor."

The bad news of the recession has surfaced in rock 'n' roll and country. Paul McCartney, Bob Seger, Billy Joel, The Pretenders, the Dead Kennedys and the Oak Ridge Boys are among dozens of artists who have released songs about today's hard times.

"Some of the songs are silly, others just cute, but a few may rescue rock from its recent function as juvenile escapism, where the message takes a backseat to the beat."

THE RECESSION'S first musical child was an updated version of Johnny Paycheck's "Take This Job and Shove It." Rodney Lay's "I Wish I Had A Job To Show" reflected a change in the working man's attitude. Fewer people are bold enough to tell off their bosses and risk a pink slip reply.

Miss Mandrell's song proves it's not impossible for someone who has enough money to park a 72-foot luxury yacht in a lake to sing about hard times.

"It doesn't mean you have to have lived what a lyric is to identify with it," she said.

THE SAME HOLDS true for McCartney, who seems to be doing fine in his post-Beatle days. McCartney's "The Found Is Sinking" strikes at the pocketbook of every Englishman.

Merle Haggard asks the question that's on everyone's mind — "Are the Good Times Really Over?"

Haggard yearns for a return to the days when a "buck was still silver," when a Ford and a Chevy "would still last 10 years like they should, when a man could still work and still be paid."

"We can read about the latest in fashion magazines."

"But that don't change the fact that we got patches on our jeans."

- Private aircraft owners, because I said they were all rich and used tax-supported government facilities without paying much for them. A lot of private plane owners are rich, but a lot more fly for fun, do not deduct their travels as business expenses and often share ownership with two or three other people. They are not rich.

Governor intervenes on budget

tion grants to communities and in lesser areas, Stolberg said.

O'Neill, who had for weeks a budget was in reach if lawmakers put their minds to it, sounded less optimistic about a compromise by Wednesday, though he was giving up hope of a special session could be avoided.

"I'm hopeful, not overly optimistic, but optimistic enough to believe that it can be avoided," O'Neill told reporters who gathered in his office after the late meeting with Groppo and Stolberg. O'Neill warned that failure to adopt a budget by July 1 would keep spending at current levels, which he said could hurt the poor and cities, which could least afford the harm.

Stolberg, speaking after the evening House caucus, said that if a special session is needed he hoped the conflicting sides in the House could reach a budget by July 1.

"I would hope they will recognize as soon as possible that the integrity of their positions perhaps is not as crucial as the integrity of the state continuing to function after June 30," Stolberg said.

Groppo grumbled over the prospect of the special session, which he said would cost state taxpayers $9,000 a day. He also said the longer the state went without a budget, the longer it would take to get one.

"I think the longer they go into June the worse it's going to get," said Groppo, who said while he personally wouldn't try to deal with Republicans on a budget, some Democrats might and "hospitably they will come up with a bipartisan package."

Car hits deer

ANDOVER — An unidentified driver suffered facial lacerations early this morning when he hit a deer and it smashed through his windshield, authorities said today.

Police said the injuries to the driver, whose name could not be obtained this morning, were minor facial lacerations. Specific details about the accident, which was reported at four minutes before 1 a.m. and happened near the intersection of Routes 6 and 316, were not available this morning, police said.

Royal habits

An entourage of 24,000 — noblemen with their families, servants and household goods — accompanied the Empress Elizabeth of Imperial Russia whenever she moved the 400 miles between her palaces at St. Petersburg and Moscow. At her death in 1902, Elizabeth's closets contained 15,000 dresses.

They then found Rashid Eskandani, 27, of East Hartford, on the floor inside the bar, who was later determined to be the victim of an assault by Kinney and Farrell.
