More Meekville Families from the 1920's

The Jackson Family

John Peter Jackson was born in Ternopol, Austria in 1876. His native language was German. He left the Austrian Army and sailed for America in 1900. He had a letter from a family friend with him offering him a job as coachman in Greenwich Ct. Martina Larsen was born in Christiana in 1878, Norway and spoke Norwegian of course and was working as a bookkeeper on the docks there where she was told by sailors that there were similar jobs available in N.Y.City. She was one of a remarkable number of women who set off for America on their own. However, you probably won't be surprised to learn that she soon decided the N.Y.City docks were a rough place for a woman to work in 1900, and so she took a job as a housekeeper for a doctor in Brooklyn, and then got a job at a Greenwich, Ct. estate where she met John Jackson who worked next door. They were married Apr 16, 1904 and then moved to Glastonbury before their first child John Olaf Jackon was born. His middle name came from the name of the ship that brought his mother to America, the Helli Olav. John Olaf was later called Gallie by his neighbors in Buckland, but he was always called John by his family. Their next child Alice was to be named Elizabeth, but the towns clerk in Glastonbury misunderstood John Jackon's German pronunciation, and wrote Alice Beeta on her birth certificate, and she's been Alice ever since. It was Alice Jackson Ousmore whom I had a very nice conversation with, so it is she who is telling this story. John and Alice were followed by Grace (who died in 1924 as a result of polio) Raymond, Thelma, and Burton. Census records tell us that her father became a naturalized citizen sometime between 1910 and 1920. We have asked the naturalization service to search for these records, but have not heard from them yet.

More perspective on the Connecticut Valley Tobacco Growers Association and farming in Buckland

They were renting their farm land in Glastonbury and growing tobacco. Alice believes she was about 6 years old when she began to help, setting out tobacco plants. Like many people who came to this country from Sweden John Jackson wanted to own his land. This led him eventually to Meekville where he bought 20 acres from Michael J. Burns in 1923. As his sons came of age he rented 60 more acres. As with many other families in Buckland the whole family helped with the farm work. Alice was 12 years old when they moved to the house on Tolland Tp. just east of Meekville Rd. She was old enough to have a very clear memory of what was happening in the farming community at that time. She remembers that her father was not at first in favor of joining the Connecticut Valley Tobacco Growers' Assoc, which was being proposed in 1922-3, but after conferring with his neighbors he decided it would be best if they all joined together. There followed 5 very difficult years while these farmers were under contract to sell their tobacco to the Assoc. During that time Harper Coal lost his land to the bank as did other farmers. The Assoc was not very successful at selling their tobacco. The Board of Directors of the Assoc, was made up of one elected Director from each of 16 Districts. Naturally the local farmers were inclined to elect their most successful and respected farmers as their representatives. As Alice remembers this may have had an effect on just how things worked out. The farmers thought that if they stuck together they could get a better price for their tobacco. They formed the Assoc, and management set their prices. The buyers came back with a lower offer and expected the Assoc to negotiate - or deal, but the Assoc refused. They thought they were in a position to get their asking... price, but they were wrong. The Directors who made these decisions were the more successful, (comparatively larger) small farmers. They were in a better position to hold out for their price than were many of the smaller farmers they represented in their districts. Looking back at this story in this light it's not surprising that these smaller farmers eventually felt they had to organize and protest, and that some of them began to contrive to break their contracts and sell their crops at the lower price, outside the Assoc. They did not have the resources to hold out. This eventually brought about the failure of the Assoc, many farms and at least one of the banks that had backed the Assoc.

It seems poor information about available tobacco and the size of the surplus already owned by the tobacco companies led to poor decisions. It was the surplus of tobacco itself that was truly the cause of the problem. In some towns however the farmers clashed each other creating hard feelings that in some cases still exist in our neighboring towns to this day. Stories of acts of vandalism, unexplained fires and so on are recalled by many. If Alice Jackson was a Jackson family can be taken to represent the Buckland farming community then perhaps, among neighbors and farmers and goodwill towards men prevailed more, perhaps based on the assumption that everyone involved was doing what they believed was right and best. I have heard no such stories of vandalism during these years in Buckland. Good relation among neighbors seems to have endured in general even through those difficult times.

Alice Cussun tells her view of the story from a unique point of view. She went to work as a secretary in 1944 for the Hartford County Fire Insurance Co. The man she worked for and the President of the company was Joseph W. Alsop who had been the President of the Con, Valley Tobacco Growers Assoc. During the height of the controversy in the Assoc. Mr. Alsop was removed from his post as President by the membership, but he was later reinstated and saw the Assoc. through to its dissolution, a very difficult job. Alice says without a moments hesitation that he was a wonderful man. He was from Middlebury and was educated at Oxford and a wonderful man to work for.

She remembers too Alfred Mendelssohn who with B.G. Meyer bought the Associations Buckland warehouse (now Cabell) & Jones) when the Assoc. failed. He would have been among the buyers who were on the opposite side of this economic wrestling match. If my facts are correct Meyer & Mendelssohn bought the tobacco that became the subject of the lawsuit that decided that this particular farmer was within his rights when he transferred his property into his wife's name so that she could sell the tobacco without breaking his contract with the Assoc. This opened the door for other farmers who wanted to get out of their contracts, and effectively broke the Assoc. But Alfred Mendelssohn is remembered by people in Buckland as an honorable man and a good man to work for who successfully managed the Meyer & Mendelssohn Tobacco Warehouse for many years. I have no doubt that the farmer mentioned above needed to sell his tobacco.

In the 1930's the Jackson's were selling their tobacco to Meyer & Mendelssohn. Mr. & Mrs. Mendelssohn had dinner at the Jackson's house several times, but Alice remembers being quite surprised when Mr & Mrs. Mendelssohn came by just after the 1938 hurricane had struck. John P. Jackson died in 1936 and the farm was now being managed by his sons. How had they come through the storm Mr. Mendelssohn wanted to know. The family was safe but all of the tobacco sheds but one were down and their crop in ruins. How would they manage to get started in the spring was the next question. It did not look very good, was her brother John's reply. Alice hearing this Mr. Mendelssohn asked if $5,000 would see them through. It would. He instructed his wife to make out the check. No formal arrangements were made for paying this back, interest etc. It was just understood that it would be. The sheds were rebuilt and the family continued to grow tobacco for a number of years, and then sold the land to the Hartson Tobacco Co. and the Jacksons pursued other opportunities.

Alice Jackson married Francis Cussun. She has lived in several places but in Bolton for the last 45 yrs. and has been a widow now for 23 years. She believe she said that she still uses her riding mower to cut her grass. Her brother Burton also lives in Bolton and now has 2 great grandchildren, the beginning of the 5th generation of the Jacksons who live in America, John and Marthine's great great grandchildren.
The Culver Family

To Robert and Russell Culver born in 1930 & 1936 in Buckland and who lived further east on Tolland Tpk. Meeksville was the home of Grandpa Edwin S. (1868-1935) and Grandma Sarah W. Culver (1877-1960). They lived in the house that John Meek built about 1876 on the east side of Angell St. They bought their house from Charles C. Price and moved to Meeksville in 1922 probably from Hartford. I found the family in the 1900 U.S. Census, in Meriden, but could not find them in 1920, perhaps because they were in the process of moving, or because of a misspelling of the name. However the Meriden City Directory for 1903 states that Edwin S. Culver "has removed to Hartford". According to that record Robert and Russell's grandparents and great grandparents were all born in Connecticut. Edwin Culver was a foreman working at Underwood Typewriter in Hartford - one of Meeksville's "commuters".

Their children were Howard, Raymond, Robert and Rachel. Rachel married Tom Spillane (son of the first superintendent at the Hartman Plantation) and lived in Meriden. She died just last summer. Alice Cusson remembers her as a very handsome woman who lived next door and taught her to drive. Robert Culver married Hazel Colton. Their son Russell lives in Virginia and provided much of this information, his brother Robert lives in South Carolina. The Buckland Times has also traveled as far as California to their cousin Elia Hadd. One of Howard's children, June Ryan still lives nearby in South Windsor.

The Colton family lived on Adams St. in 1910. The parents speaking only as I've marked indicate that Fred and Sarah have been married for 5 years. Sarah has given birth to 6 children, but only 2 were living in 1910. This census taker seems to indicate with the M1 and M2 next to Fred and Sarah that this is Sarah's 2nd marriage. Fred worked at the Hilliard Woollen Mill.

The Zaremba family appears in the 1920 U.S. Census as the Zaremba family as the census taker apparently struggled to their Polish accent and pronunciation.

Mary (Zaremba) Ceaser was the first of the 11 children in the family of Frank and Anna Zaremba. They lived in the Martin Gilman house south of Tolland Tpk. in 1924 then moved to Wapping and eventually back to the farmhouse that stood behind the Gilman farm. It was owned at that time by Louis Grant for whom Frank worked, caring for a team of horses for him among other duties. Mary recalls that she spent her first year at school in Buckland. At the time there were no nearby neighbors with children and so she had no opportunity to learn any English, her crossing the tracks at the 1st crossing in his buggy. He had a cow and a pasture on the South side of Tolland Tpk. Frank Zaremba saw the train coming and hollered with all his might, but Mr. Palmes was stone deaf. The buggy was smashed and Mr. Palmes killed, 21 Jul., 1922. Deafness especially in old age was such a common thing in those days. Young children today would find it difficult to imagine just how many people were hard of hearing or completely deaf.

William Henry Norton who lived in one of the houses on the North side of Tolland Tpk. and who worked for Harper Case died in a similar accident at the 2nd crossing on the evening of Jan. 9, 1928. It was a foggy night as Beeton Case recalls and he thinks they may have been crossing the tracks at an unofficial crossing just in front of the Horton's house. The wheels of the truck may have gotten caught on the tracks. Alice Cusson remembers the long blast of the train whistle telling them that there had been an accident. And there was another man in the truck who died as well, Leo P. Hannon who lived at 137 Main St. Frank Zaremba eventually had a disagreement with Louis Grant and went to work as a teamster for the Hartman Plantation. The family moved to 610 N. Main St. on a room house which they rented for $16 a month. Her parents lived there until 1960. Mary started working on tobacco then went on to work at Underwood and Pratt & Whitney. She lives in East Hartford and has been a widow since 1971.
